It's beautiful to look at, but is it comfortable?

'should be! However, even modern homeowners suffer from one or more of the six heating cooling problems below.

gh architectural styles have changed greatly over the nany people still depend on just one thermostat to control rt throughout their home. This can't help but create m areas.

arate living and sleeping areas obviously require dif- nt temperatures—warm and relaxing in the living area— and comfortable for sleeping.

your home has large glass areas, the inside temperature nges every time the sun, wind or outside temperature var- . . even with double paned windows.

ny split level, warm air tends to rise to upper levels leav- cooler air in the lower rooms.

oms over unheated areas, such as a garage, often have floors and walls.

nished basement, because it is below ground level re- res more heat than the rest of the house.

Vith a spread-out floor plan, sun, shade and wind in different areas of the house can cause widely differing heating and cooling requirements.

The answer to all six of them is zone control . . . dividing your home into two or more areas that you can keep at different temperatures to suit your family's needs.

Zoning is simple, too! With a hydronic (hot water) system, all you need is a thermostat for each zone, and a zone valve to control the hot water flow. With a forced air system, all you need is a damper motor and thermostat to control the air distribution to each zone.

The cost of this equipment depends, of course, on how many zones you need. In most cases . . . just pennies a day. It will give you the extra comfort only zoning can provide. And, you'll probably save fuel, too!

Want to know more about zoning? Write Honeywell, Dept. HB7-21, Minneapolis, Minnesota 55408 for free literature. Or, call your heating or plumbing contractor. He'll help you zone more comfort into your home.

Not everybody should own a Yamaha Grand

Just people with educated ears. People with young ears to educate. People who instinctively recognize painstakingly-created quality. Music-loving people who insist on brilliant tone, flawless resonance, extended retention of perfect tune, and outstanding durability. These are the qualities that make Yamaha Grand pianos the choice of professional pianists, composers, conservatories, concert halls, and universities the world over.

Those are the qualities you will own. If you own a Yamaha.

And they're not hearsay qualities. Yamaha Grands are bonded with this ten-year warranty. "If any defect in workmanship or materials causes customer dissatisfaction, Yamaha will correct the fault to the owner's approval or replace the entire piano."

You'd expect a grand piano with such guaranteed perfection to cost a great deal more than other pianos. But it doesn't. And actually costs far less than the few pianos of near comparable quality.

But to decide if a Yamaha is for you, you really have to listen. We'd be happy to tell you where your nearest Yamaha dealer is. Just write:

Fascination

What holds more fascination for a young boy than construction work, especially when it's taking place in his own home! Maybe it's the materials fitting so precisely into place, the speed and agility of the craftsman, the resounding noise of hammer against nail that holds our little friend's attention; or maybe it's because he will have a room of his own when remodeling is complete.

In selecting Bestwall products for their home, his parents have assured him of safe, sturdy and attractive surroundings. For instance, the wall and ceiling board here is gypsum, reinforced with literally miles of glass fibers for greater resistance to shock and impact and for greater fire protection. Other Bestwall products include Wood-grained Wallboard, vinyl-clad Eternawall, and new Firestop. Write for our free full-color booklet, "How To Select Quality Building Materials". We took our children to Europe

By RUBY ZAGOREN

• Our two children were playing in the hotel room before bedtime. Zona, age nine, was saying, "You can't buy anything in Spain until you change your money. Your lire aren't any good here. You need pesetas."

Her seven-year-old brother, Grant, considered. "All right: I'll change a hundred lire into pesetas."

An unusual game for two American youngsters? Yes, but the game was based on observations made while traveling through Europe with us. The children noted how we stopped at borders, had our passports and the car registration checked, and then immediately went to the money exchange offices to trade travelers' checks for the currency of the country just entered. Sometimes there were guilders or francs left, and these, too, were exchanged for the currency of the country on our tour.

Each evening we let the children play for a short time before going to sleep. Invariably their games reflected the events of the trip.

So many friends back in the States felt that our 6,500-mile trip through Europe was going to be "wasted" on such young children. "They won't remember anything," they said. "You'll enjoy the trip more if you go by yourselves. You won't be held back by the children."

WE ARE the type of parents who enjoy sharing experiences with our children. We couldn't tell ahead of time exactly how much the youngsters would derive from the trip. But we like having them along, and we had saved so they could accompany us. Having done it, we feel that the children profited greatly from the adventure. It broadened their education and their understanding.

As Grant's second-grade teacher said, "When I heard you were taking your children to Europe, I thought you were crazy. But after having Grant in class, I realize how much he got out of the trip. In the art period, he keeps drawing different things he saw in Europe. When he writes stories, he writes about what he saw. I've learned more about Europe from him than I did from any adult friends who went there."

The children kept making up games as we traveled. One was a game called Castle. According to their rules, Zona was queen and Grant king—but not of the same country, since each wanted absolute power in his own domain. In England, they chose miniature knights and armored princes and armored horses for their souvenirs. These were used in Castles. They arranged their men on the dressers or on a chair and they contended verbally with each other.

WHEN they saw the constant demands for passports, each child drew his own passport with a rough likeness of himself. Grant carried his homemade passport for the rest of the trip.

Exchanging money was a game of continuing interest. They became very adept at converting dollars into shillings, francs, and marks. As a matter of fact, we fell into the habit of consulting the children on the comparative worth of moneys. It was easy for them.

Like most Americans, we spent an entire day in the vast rooms of the Louvre. That evening, the children held an art exhibit. Their collection included only the most famous painters: Rubens, Rembrandt, Leonardo da Vinci. The two youngsters had the pleasure of drawing the masterpieces, putting artists' signatures on them, and then displaying them in their own "museum."

Their behavior was so exemplary that the Europeans volunteered praise. The manager of a small Paris pension where we stayed commented, "Your children are very quiet and well-behaved."

Our landlady at a Bed and Breakfast establishment in London, where we spent our last five days, gave each of the children a present the morning we left. "I wish the children around here were as good as yours," she said.

The observations and comments of the children added spice and new views to our vagabondia through thirteen delightful countries of western and southern Europe. Sometimes their insights were penetrating, with the special candor and truthfulness that chil-

Spice Islands
helps you toss a salad with a continental flair

From the Bay of Biscay to the Black Sea, wine vinegar is the vinegar in all fine salad dressings. The reason? Wine vinegar enhances the natural flavor of salad greens as no other vinegar can. And Spice Islands brings you the aristocrat of wine vinegars. Naturally. As its name implies, wine vinegar is made from wine. The better the wine, the better the vinegar. Our specialists buy only fine California table wines for our vinegars: reds, whites and rosés of such body, bouquet, and clarity they produce vinegars without peer. Brisk, yet rich with the full flavor of the vine. We bring you wine vinegars in wide variety, too. Red, White or Rosé without herbs, as well as red and white flavored with premium herbs from our own farms: White Wine Vinegars with Tarragon or Basil; Red Wine Vinegars with Tarragon, Eschalot or Garlic.

Keep a selection of Spice Islands wine vinegars in your kitchen to add international dash to your salad dressings. Discover their versatility in meat, vegetable and sauce cookery, too. And next time you run out of any herb, spice or seasoning replace it with Spice Islands. You'll be delighted with the savory superiority of everything that bears the Spice Islands name.

Enjoy winter in summer comfort... with Thermopane® insulating glass

ICE SKATING! Snowmen! Snowball fights! Come winter, watch the children romp outside while you sit in warm comfort behind Thermopane insulating glass. Thermopane provides dependable insulation because it has the more vaportight Bondermetic Seal®. It actually bonds the glass to the metal.

For window walls, picture windows, sliding glass doors, be sure your home is equipped with Thermopane with the metal-to-glass seal. For other windows, there's GlasSeal®—units made with a fused all-glass seal. Both eliminate the bother and cost of storm sash. Remember: you can't go wrong with the original—and America's most popular—insulating glass... Thermopane.

Thermopane consists of two panes of glass with dehydrated hermetically sealed between them. There are two types of Thermopane: (1) with the Bondermetic Seal (metal bonded to glass) windows of all sizes; and (2) GlasSeal (glass-to-glass seal) wood or metal sash of more conventional sizes.

WE TOOK OUR CHILDREN TO EUROPE

dren are gifted with. For instance, after seeing an exhibit of abstract paintings in Antibes' Grimaldi Museum, Zona said, "The drawings were like a three-year-old's." They both preferred the classical art, which represented subjects that were readily identifiable.

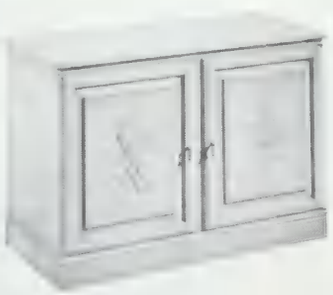
AFTER several hours in the Louvre, Grant commented, "I know why there are so many people in the Louvre: once they get in they never get out."

The Louvre also gave us another well-remembered remark. Before entering, I told the children that no one was to mention being hungry while we were looking at the art. We were in the Louvre three or four hours, when we came to a still life depicting a roast beef dinner. Grant called excitedly, "Look, Mommy, look. Food!"

Our son became enthralled with the town squares that are a part of the life in Italy and France. Often his choice of souvenirs was a miniature cathedral, an Eiffel tower, or the Palace of Vecchio. Each evening he spent time building a town square with his miniatures. It boasted St. Peter's, the Chartres Cathedral, Westminster Palace, and the Palace of Vecchio. Never was there a more distinguished town square.

We let the children do some of their own shopping, and we enjoyed their going to a shopkeeper and asking, "Combien?", or "Quanto?" The salespeople grinned as they watched the children counting out their lire and pesetas. And when they were given change, Grant did not budge from the shop until he had counted it.

In discussing languages, Grant asked, "Do the cows in France say 'moo,' or do they say it in French?"



They learned to say "Please" and "thank you" in French, German, and Italian. They learned other words by watching us buy bread in a boulangerie in France or in a broodbakjen in Holland. They went with us to the greengrocer, to the "boucherie," to the "charcuterie." Although we ate one meal each day in a restaurant, we lunched picnic style along the way.

"You use me as an excuse," Zona said one day when nature caused a halt in our trip. And I agreed with her. There were occasions when the car would hold no more gas, but the demands of nature were imperative. Often I'd ask at a farmhouse if "my little girl" could use the bathroom. And my husband asked permission for Grant. I explained to the children that it's less embarrassing for a parent to request this for a child. We tried to coordinate our stops for gas and satisfying nature, but there were cases when the coordination failed.

The children broke down barriers. They made friends with other children, although they couldn't speak the language. Through the children, we met European parents. Zona is still corresponding with an English girl she met while ten thousand feet on top of Mt. Rosa, where we went by cable car to get a better look at the Matterhorn.

ONE DAY on the Viaregio, Italy, beach, Zona and Grant were building sand castles. One by one, nearly a dozen children—the little girls with gold earrings in their pierced lobes—gathered about and dug, patted, and helped. Then their mothers gathered around, and What's the difference between a pearl diver and a smart diner?

The pearl diver comes up with a pearl—sometimes. Smart diners can always end up with a pearl—a Cointreau On-the-Rocks Pearl. It's the new way to enjoy Cointreau Liqueur—the crowning touch to a perfect dinner.

The Cointreau Pearl:

Pour 2 ounces of Cointreau Liqueur over ice cubes in an old-fashioned glass. Et voila!

Watch Cointreau Liqueur change from crystal clearness to an elegant, delightfully appetizing pearly opalescence when you serve it the modern way...on the rocks. You may choose to add a squeeze of fresh lime for extra zest. The Cointreau Pearl is only one of the many popular, palate-pleasing drinks made with Cordials by Cointreau. CHINESE TEMPLE CORDS were used to toll the bell calling worshipers to prayer in Buddhist temples. We rather doubt in our servantless way of life that you'll have use for it as a bell pull, but it's enormously smart in a wall picture grouping. Chinese red, antique gold, deep green, or black braided cord. 40" long, $10.50; 54", $15.75. Ziff, HB7, Box 3072, Merchandise Mart Pl., Chicago 54.

TAKE JUST TWO FEET of wall space, and give it to this charming maple secretary. It will charge your bedroom, a tiny foyer, a living-kitchen with decorative interest. Hinged top becomes a writing space, pigeonholes hold stationery. With 2 front drawers. Salem maple finish, 24" w., 16" d., 37" h., $54.50 exp. chgs. coll. Catalog 25¢. Ephraim Marsh, Dept. 204, Box 266, Concord, N.C.

STAR IN STRIPES. Pop presides over the fish-fry or the burger-broil in a bold red and black or blue and black striped apron. The pockets are lined with plastic foam (with thumb slot) for handling hot stuff. And when chili sauce and mustard have imposed their abstract pattern, toss it into the washing machine. Fits any size. $4.95. Windfall, HB7, 185 Adams, Bedford Hills, N.Y.

KYOTO WIND CHIMES

Long ago the ancient Japanese discovered the secrets of capturing the sounds of the four winds. These chimes will tinkle on a quiet, starry night and the sound is sweet enchantment. Hang them on a tree near terrace or patio and the shy breeze will stir a melodious chord. Eighteen natural bamboo chimes, measure 12" wide x 15" overall. Chimes like these are found in the exotic temple gardens of Kyoto, ancient center of culture.

Zona and Grant were in the middle of the sand-pile conversation.

When we stopped to change film in a small Holland town, nearly thirty children clustered around the car to look at us. Grant and Zona gave out lollypops from home.

Zona kept a diary and wrote in it daily for the sixty-two days. This diary proved to be a source of fun for the family. One of our favorite entertainments at night was to have Zona read aloud from her entries. The one we recall best is: "For lunch we had food."

In Austria, she wrote, "We had noodle soup, Grant and I. Mom and Dad had goulash, but all it was was three pieces of meat and a small dish of gravy. Mom was annoyed. But now she's happy. She just had a big steak."

Now we are home, and we keep hearing the children make references to their European adventure. Their trip to Europe was an introduction to other people, to other lands, to other customs. They helped make our trip memorable. For two months they were models of well-behaved American children. As soon as we arrived home, Zona said, "We're back to normal now; we can argue if we want."

And every once in a while Grant sighs, "I must go back to Paris." ■

"We air conditioned our 7-room home for just $975"

Mr. & Mrs. M. L. Humphreys of Kansas City, Kansas, were pleasantly surprised by the reasonable cost of enjoying General Electric Central Air Conditioning.

Our home has 1,832 square feet of liv-ng area," Mr. Humphreys observes, and the two-ton unit we had in the liv-ng room before didn't begin to cool the est of the house. But since we installed our General Electric central system, every room stays at the same even temperature. And that means a lot—especially when it comes to sleeping in hot weather. We wouldn't be without it."

I have sinus trouble," Mrs. Humphreys emarks, "and I was afraid central air onditioning would make it worse. Ac-ually, central air conditioning has re-eved it. My head stays clear as a bell. t's wonderful!"

"We love to entertain," Mrs. Humphreys continues, "but when the temperature got to be over 100° and the humidity high, it used to be almost impossible. Now, we have our friends in all summer long."

I looked at all makes," says Mr. Hum-hreys, standing beside his G-E central nit, "and we decided to go with G.E., ecause they're reliable. Installation ook just two days. We haven't had one ervice call since."

"I like to char-broil," adds amateur chef Humphreys, "and now, we can cook out during the summers, then eat in where it's cool. Of course, air conditioning has added a great deal to the value of our property, too."

f you have forced-air heat—as the Humphreys do—you, too, can enjoy General Electric Central Air Conditioning at a very modest price. Call your G-E dealer for a free survey and installation estimate. Ask him, too, about his easy financing terms. You'll find him listed in the Yellow Pages under "Air Conditioning Equipment."

One of New York's thrills: Showroom sight-seeing

• Heading for the World's Fair? Before you even pack your bag, we suggest that you betake yourself to your decorator, because she or he can open to you an extra World's Fair of home furnishings for your own private viewing. We speak of the "closed showrooms," where you may see in complete and full range the furniture, fabrics, wallpapers, carpets, and accessories made by the "Tiffany" names in the business, super-quality wares rarely found in retail stores.

But to enter these showrooms you must go equipped with an introduction from your decorator, by letter or card. It is true that a few showrooms will let the public browse without introduction, but you may not buy direct from them. It is also true that such showrooms exist in other cities—in metropolises like Chicago, Los Angeles, San Francisco, and Dallas, for instance—but without question they exist in greatest number and fullest variety in New York. Whereas other cities' showrooms are likely to display an edited selection of a manufacturer's line, New York's showrooms usually present the full works. One fabric showroom maintains a "library" of special-order fabrics that lets you see 70,000 color combinations.

These showrooms differ from usual wholesale showrooms in that they represent the kind of quality wares made in limited quantity for a limited market, often on custom order. Showroom buying is not "getting it wholesale." Purchases may be made only through your decorator or the decorating department of a store, and you pay a retail price. Prices quoted in New York may be higher elsewhere in the country.

New York's quality showrooms are legion, but for the names of some that HOUSE BEAUTIFUL considers specially worthy of a visit, turn to the listing on page 47.

How to be king of all you survey and still drive to work

• A powerful new factor is coming to life in America. Once you understand and make use of it, you can live farther from work, in places of real beauty, and with perhaps no more travel time than you now spend.

This new element is the Interstate Highway System—41,000 miles of safe, high-speed roads. It is half-finished now and will be completed in 1972.

However, its very name, "Interstate," has misled people to associate it only with long-distance travel, such as vacation trips. Yet the Interstate Highways offer just as many advantages for short trips of 10-60 miles. Since they radiate from all the big cities, they let you get farther from town, at speeds of 60–70 miles an hour.

In this issue we explain what this network of highways can do for you in terms of buying land and improving your life. And we show seven houses, built in beautiful places by owners who wanted to get away from it all. ■

New stretch of Interstate System in Vermont shows beautiful country now accessible. At every intersection, highways go over (as this one does) or under the crossroad.

A view of the future, from the General Motors

This new sign could lead you to

• Don't give up that dream of a sun-drenched hilltop with a panoramic view, a rushing white-water stream in a valley, green acres of rolling farmland, or a lonely stretch of sand beside the pounding surf. There are ways to make it come true—not just for weekends or vacations, but for everyday, year-round living. A few minutes of safe and easy driving at 60 or 70 miles per hour can take you 30 miles into the countryside and make a world of difference in the kind of land your money will buy.

To take advantage of this opportunity, you have to look at land and its location from the point of view of a real-estate operator, and you must think of travel in terms of minutes instead of miles. Real-estate people look at land as it will be tomorrow—not just as it is today. They buy it as it is. They make their profit on what it becomes. You can do the same for yourself.

First, you must find out all you can about the Interstate routes within reach of your town—as of now, and in the future. A good place to start is with the new Humble Oil & Refining Company map featuring the Interstate System. It clearly shows the completed sections, routes under construction, and the proposed routes. (It's available from Humble dealers and the Humble Touring Service offices.)

At first you'll want to get the general lay of the land revealed by the Interstate. Drive the highway in every direction. See how far it takes you in 20 or 30 minutes. It can lead to countryside never before accessible by car.

If the proposed road is not finished, try exploring by the back roads the area that will be served when it is. When you find the kind of terrain that suits your fancy, check with the State Highway Department for the exact routes of the Interstate and locations of entrance and exit roads.

Use U.S. geodetic topographical maps to seek out especially interesting and beautiful areas. You may find within easy range ponds, streams, lakes, and hilltops that cannot be seen from the highway or even from the feeder roads. Your own ingenuity and sense of urgency will lead you to the discoveries. All we can do here is to tell you that this country is now midway through the largest public-works project in the history of the world, and that it may add great benefits to your daily life.

Although it may take a little doing to change your thinking about time and distance, it can be worth the effort. Just because you have lived for years within 15 to 20 minutes of your work, you should not automatically rule out the possibility of driving for 35 to 45 minutes to get to a place of real beauty.

exhibit at the New York World's Fair, dramatizes use of safe, high-speed roads to take you to more beautiful places for everyday living.

The Interstate System has already made this possible for many people, and will do so for thousands more. You soon discover that half an hour of clear sailing on an Interstate highway is less tiring and frustrating than fifteen minutes of stop-and-go driving in city traffic.

But what about the time? Who wants to lose an hour or so a day on the road? This is a natural question, if you've never been a commuter. Time, however, is not lost. You aren't asleep or unconscious when you drive. You can think, relax, and review as you drive a good highway.

You can sit comfortably, listen to good music or the latest news. On the way to work, you can organize your approach to the day, and unwind on the way home. Hundreds of thousands of people, including most of the editors of this magazine, spend time in daily transit in order to enjoy the kinds of places in which they prefer to live. Don't say you couldn't cope with it until you know what might be gained by doing so.

As you look at the houses in this issue, you'll see that their charm depends as much upon the site as the architecture. Beautiful sites, such as (Please turn to page 109)

The times indicated are based on distance from downtown areas. Small sketches characterize the charm of countryside reached by existing or proposed Interstate highways. Check your local maps for similar opportunities. Also see Denver map on page 109.

Magnificent space on a magnificent site

• It isn't how much space you have, it's how you use it. The house shown on these pages has less than 1,500 square feet of floor area, but it seems like a big house. How does it achieve this commanding character?

It gains space by exploiting it vertically as well as horizontally. Taking advantage of a sloping site, it finds the added volume needed for a living room of dramatic height in what might otherwise have been a basement area. It stretches space horizontally by making outdoor areas seem like a part of indoor areas. It expands indoor areas by making them all work together so they function as one big space instead of many small ones.

Most important, it imparts a depth of character to its space so it is never completely known (Please turn the page)

The house you see in the photograph above doesn't merely rest on the surface of its site. It is joined to it. The mass of the central chimney is an anchor pin, rooting house to ground.

Built on a slope (below), this house gains the bonus of space on different levels. The slope also makes possible a 17' high living room, the full height of the house on its downslope side.

On the balcony, there is a sense of elevation that gives a buoyant quality to the space. You are looking off into the trees, and though separate from the living-room area below, you sense its presence. The space is continuous, unbroken.

Here you are in the living room, looking up at the balcony, which is seen in the photograph on the opposite page. The doorway at left leads out to the terrace seen in the picture below.

There is a terrace like this on each side of the living room and adjoining each bedroom. Floors and walls of these outdoor spaces are identical in materials to floors and walls indoors.

or fully explored. Its facets and its beauty are ever changing with the hour of the day, the weather, and the seasons—even with the attitude of the viewer.

This house is in Arkansas, but the lessons it teaches are applicable anywhere. It was designed by Architect Euine Fay Jones for owners who wanted a small house but not a confining one. They wanted to live close to nature, simply, privately, and with housekeeping at a minimum.

Located on the fringe of town, this house looks to the wilderness. It turns away from the city streets on which it is located and focuses on the untrafficked miles that lie the other way. It uses this space as if it were its own. When there is complete unity between a house and its surroundings it can do this, for there is little to separate the space inside from the space outside.

To be one with mountain and stream, a house needs a special character. The house Fay Jones designed has none of the clichés associated with wilderness or mountain homes. It has no log-cabin or Swiss-chalet motif. Yet it has the same warmth, intimacy, and down-to-basics that made those old designs so appealing. Instead of being a traditional imitation, it has become a superb creation.

This house is built on a rough hillside, a site other people rejected. Generally, people look for a site that is flat and easy to build on. What they don't realize is that "flat" can be synonymous with insipid. Easy building is seldom a route to distinction. Building on a sloping lot can mean a view, and the pleasant (Please turn the page)

Above, you see how the space of the bedrooms can be included as part of the house space. At right, you see the folding door of the bedroom closed, but observe that the continuity of the ceiling is still visible through the glass above the closed door.

The cross-axis of the house, joining bedroom to bedroom across the dining balcony, works as a breezeway. By varying the door openings at each end, you can speed the breeze or slow it down. But space is never stopped. It flows right on through the walls.

opportunity of living on more than one level, each with its own spatial aspects and special qualities.

In a wilderness house (and in many suburban houses as well), you have taken nature as your consort. To live happily with it, you must make it an ally and a functioning part of the organic whole of your thinking and your plan. No attempt was made here to change the site in any way, or impose a preconceived plan upon it. No traditional foundation wall was built to compensate for the slope and produce a level floor plan. If the terrain sloped, the house would adjust to its demands. This meant that the house structure was much taller on the lower part of the slope than on the top of the hill. It made possible and logical the living room of greater height and the balcony overlooking it, a fortunate turn of events indeed. No matter how many times you enter this house, the living room with its added height, its floor-to-roof glass, and its thrilling interior garden comes as a climactic experience.

A house can be both serene and exciting. Each quality is a foil for the other, and both grow out of how space is used. The lines of the house are ones of repose. They are long and low, strongly accentuating the horizontal. This is pleasant to the eye, and psychologically soothing. It means rest and security. Ordinarily (Please turn the page)

Each of the bedrooms has a terrace and a balcony like one seen below, making it possible to step outdoors at floor level on two sides. The enclosing rail of the balcony gives it privacy and seclusion, makes it useful for sleeping and as a quiet retreat. Balcony is partly roofed.

As plan shows, though the house has six distinct and separable areas, it is essentially one big room, with each area sharing and benefiting by the space of areas adjoining it. Indoor space is augmented by six outdoor areas, each like a separate room.

a house as small in proportion to its height would look boxy and ungainly. But its generous roof stretches the 68′ length of its basic core to an over-all 100′, and the roof's wide overhangs, reaching for the ground, further reduce the height and make the length proportionally greater. The mass of the central chimney is an anchor pin, firmly rooting the house to its site, joining them inseparably.

This is a house that is not only joined to its site but appears born of it. The limestone and sandstone of which the house is built are the same rocks that lie strewn over the landscape. Where a stream cuts (Please turn to page 108)

The glass at the end of the living room turns the corners, so the view wraps around you. With the indoor garden blending with the outdoor greenery, you have a real feeling of being in the woods and a part of it, instead of merely peeking out at it.

◀ Most of the visitors from around the lake arrive by boat. The recreation and guest house is combined with a dock for ultimate convenience. Steps from the landing platform lead down to the water for swimmers. Dressing rooms are at left of entrance door.

▲ The wide deck with built-in seat rail accommodates large groups with ease. Wet swimmers and spray-drenched boatmen are welcome to dry off here in waterproof comfort. Deck extends across front of house, where wide French doors open to the living area.

The charm of a houseboat, without the motion

As the name implies, Lake Placid is calm. You can build a house just above the water level and enjoy the pleasures of life "afloat"

▪ This inviting dockhouse, with its wide deck and the sound of water lapping at the edge, offers the beauty and serenity of life on a boat—with the stability and convenience of a house. The indoor and outdoor living space is over the water. The kitchen and service areas are on shore.

The original house on this land is among the trees about 50 feet up the slope from shore. It was built in the early 1900's as an Adirondack "camp." Such mountain retreats were designed to provide a sense of enclosure and protection from the wilderness. Fortunately we have learned to open our houses outward to make better use of beautiful sites.

The first step toward the better life was taken eight years ago, when a dining room, glassed-in garden room, and large terrace were added to the main house. Daily exposure to the natural scene led to full appreciation of the beautiful setting, and thus to the eventual design of the delightful recreation house shown here. (Please turn the page)

One large room holds extra tables for sit-down dinners, or can be a quiet retreat from a hectic summer schedule. There's a lovely, [illegible] view of the water from all windows. Seat cushions are zippered for easy cleaning. Floors have heavy-duty finish.

Toward the opposite direction from picture on facing page: The entry hall is at left, dressing rooms and storage area beyond. In right corner is the bar; kitchen behind this has an entry from the land side. The bar can be used for buffet dinners.

A dock is a necessity here. It is the pleasant custom to go by boat when visiting friends with waterfront places. When a new landing was required, the owners, Mr. and Mrs. George V. Meehan, decided to combine the dock with a house designed especially for waterfront activity.

The facilities are tailored exactly to the family needs. In addition to the main lounge and serving bar shown here, there's a small pantry-kitchen used for preparing lunches and snacks, and a way-station for buffet and sit-down dinners, which are cooked in the kitchen of the main house. There are two dressing rooms for swimmers, and a large area for off-season storage of deck furniture and accessories. Furniture and finishes are all easy to maintain.

The ceiling follows the pitch of the roof to create a generous, airy sense of space. Windows on three sides provide balanced interior light. French doors open wide to the deck. The house was designed by Architect Ronald Allwork, who also remodeled the original house. Interior decoration was done by his wife, Eleanor Allwork. ■

Snacks and sandwiches, as well as drinks, are served from this bar, which opens to the entry. Front door leads directly to the deck. Verticality of the high ceiling is accentuated by use of battens set into the V-groove of the Douglas fir siding.

Before you plan, you must dare to dream

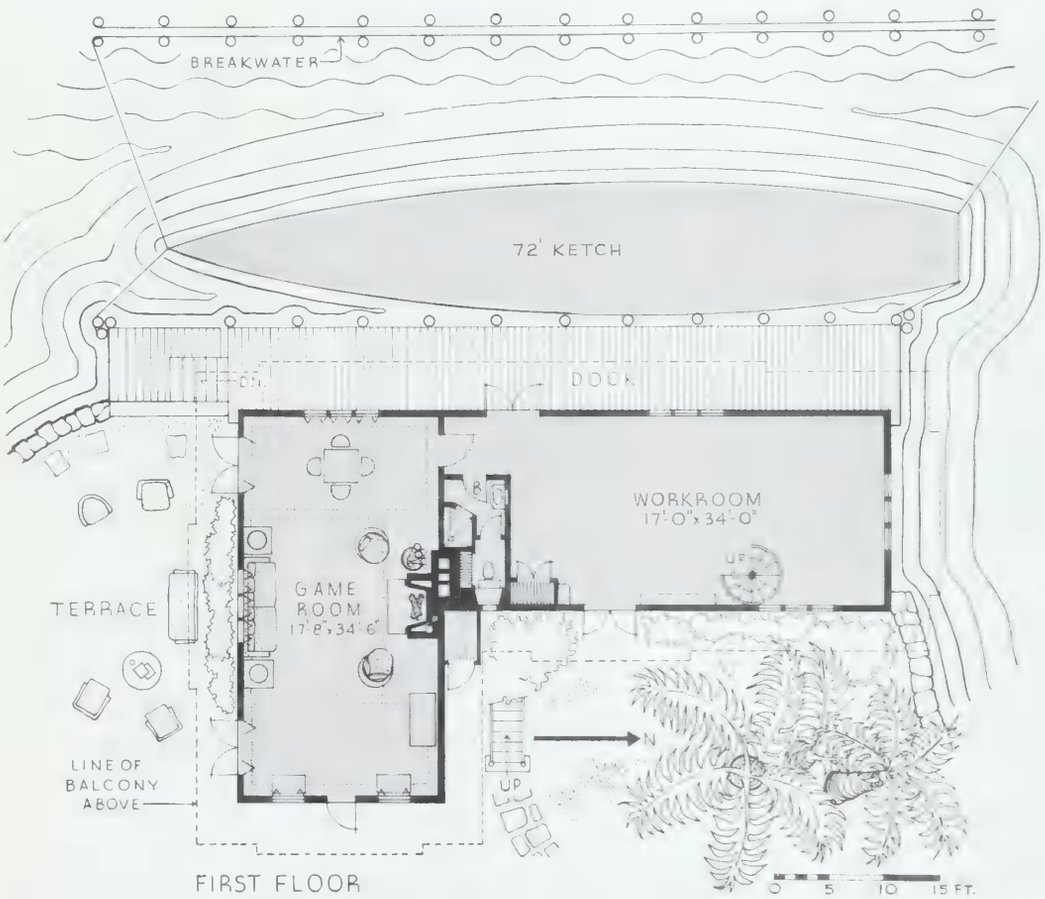
This quiet harbor in never-never land was first sighted in the mind's eye

By CARROLL CALKINS

• When yachtsman J. Seward Johnson found this snug harbor with an old boathouse on the east coast of Florida, he knew in his mind's eye the character he wanted it to have. The house, which was completely remodeled, is based on his fond memories of a "station" of the New York Yacht Club to which he used to sail. The building was first on the New Jersey shore, then on Long Island. It is now part of the marine museum at Mystic Seaport in Connecticut. (See the sepia photo below.)

At first glance this idyllic setting all seems unreal—almost too good to be true. Then you see the perfect proportions of the house, the quality of workmanship, the salty character of the boat, and the loving care with which everything is maintained. You know it is real, and marvelous. It has the unity of well-considered personal preference and a well-ordered way of life. The parts were beautifully integrated by Architect Kemp Caler (Please turn the page)

Picture below shows the building, now at Mystic, Connecticut, that inspired the carpenter-gothic detailing on this remodeled boathouse in Florida. The excellent craftsmanship was accomplished by local master carpenters working from the architect's detailed drawings. Balcony around house serves all major rooms.



◀ It's just a step from the dock beside the house to the deck of the Ocean Pearl, which is often used for cocktails and dinner. Small lagoon, where she rides steady between voyages, is protected by the breakwater at right. When this was a boathouse, lower level was an open slip. Wall and fill were added.

SECOND FLOOR

All major rooms are on the second floor, where they take advantage of the view. The balcony serves for outside circulation around the house. Casement windows open wide for better ventilation and outlook.

On the lower level, there was originally an open boat slip and storage area. The slip was enclosed, and a floor installed to make a workroom. Spiral staircase provides inside connection between the floors.

The living room has a truly magnificent view of the water, and the balcony looks down on the Ocean Pearl at her mooring below. The small fireplace in the corner is just enough to take the chill off the air on a cool evening. The hallway leads to the master bedroom.

The guest bedroom opens to the balcony on two sides and is high enough to catch the cooling breeze. The closets and chest of drawers incorporated into the outside wall make optimum use of the space. All interior paneling is made of native cypress.

and Landscape Architect Richard K. Webel. The way of life here revolves around the 72-foot Dutch-built ketch Ocean Pearl. The property, which lies between the Atlantic and a quiet sound, was purchased because it is a perfect winter-time harbor from which to cruise the southern waters. When Mr. and Mrs. Johnson are here, the boat is always alongside—just a step from the dock and you are on board. They use it for lounging, cocktails, and often for dinner.

The original building was a shingled boathouse set on piling with a covered slip below and an apartment above. The piling was unsafe, so the house was lifted and moved temporarily ashore. The boat basin was dredged, a breakwater installed, and most of the area under the house was filled in. Now piling of greenheart logs from British Guiana now supports the house, the dock, and breakwater. The roof of the house was raised (Please turn to page 109)

Most meals are taken on the balcony, the lower terrace, or in the boat. But there's space for dining in the kitchen when the weather so decrees. Clean lines of the modern appliances are perfectly at home with decorative windows and cupboard doors.

So you want to convert an old barn

It isn't as easy as it looks, says Jane Trahey, who should know. It took eight years and more checkbooks than she cares to remember to work the change you see here. Was it worth it? Here's her own account

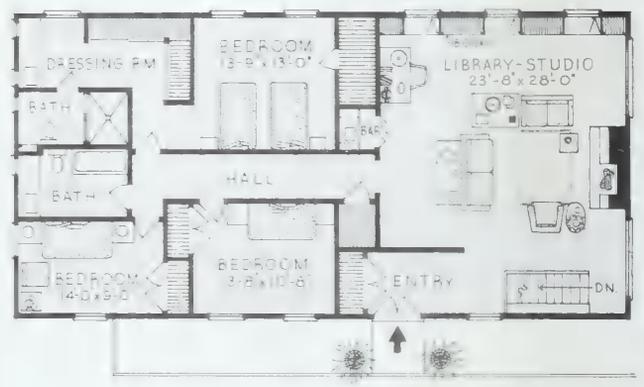
By JANE TRAHEY

• I don't know what "before" and "after" pictures mean to other people, but mine have special significance. All my "before" pictures are my Savings Account years, and all my "after" pictures are Checking Account years.

For I own Versailles. Not because my old converted barn looks like Versailles: it just cost like it. Why, just to take the trees to lunch twice a year is like picking up a lunch tab for ten at Twenty One. And they don't give you any tips on the stock market or tell you any funny elephant jokes. A lot of people I know have lovely collections of paintings and sculpture in their lives. I could frame my bills and paid receipts and have a fascinating exhibit of early septic tanks, rococo retaining walls, Early American fill, primitive gravel, and black macadam roadways. All the things you can't actually see in the barn have become my substitutes for Renoirs, Mary Cassatts, and the Fauvists.

I think converting an old building is more fun than building something new, but I know it is a tougher problem. Originally, the barn didn't offer much except size and a nice New England shape. It had the usual two floors—the top for cows and horses, I assume, and the bottom—complete with coops and a trough, a lot of chicken wire, and an old piano thirteen feet long—for pigs and fowl. The toughest chore of the entire first year of building was to get rid of the piano. I can tell you now there is no market for a thirteen-foot piano. For a brief span I thought of doing a room inside it, but no one felt there would be enough light.

The barn is on about thirteen acres of wooded land, and there are the usual number of elms with the blight, birches with the blob, and a pond (which is a bit of the Norwalk River) where two fat old turtles laze in the sun. All our friends thought we were insane. "Buy a barn for a weekend house? You must be mad. It doesn't even have a toilet." "It doesn't even have a tank," I answered.



The most important quality you must have in converting anything (a mill, a barn, or whatever) (Please turn the page)

This is the barn, as I first saw it. Birds nested in the rafters, bats clung to the dormer windows, the floor was ungraded mud, the chicken coops were still in, the water trough for the animals still worked, and it had that "nostalgic" farmyard smell.

When you look at the sunshiny "after" pictures, it all looks so easy; but do not be deluded. It took eight years and uncounted sums of money, but it was (in my estimation) well worth it.

UPPER LEVEL

LOWER LEVEL

DRAWINGS BY MADELAINE THATCHER

The space in the barn was so generous we made ourselves two living rooms (I explain why in the story). All the rooms are big, and you can stretch in them. Five people can weekend here, and you really don't have to see them till cocktail time. You can type upstairs and downstairs and never feel you are in an office.

is patience and a sense of humor. The patience is simply for trying to get people to work. You can worry about what they do later. Just get them there—that's the challenge. The sense of humor you'll need for the many crises—like trying to find the septic tank after the man who put it in has moved away, having the roof of the terrace put on at the wrong pitch, discovering that all the stone walls cry when it rains, trying to install baseboard heating against a meandering stone wall, finding a way to keep the starlings out of the only fireplace that works, realizing that the new roof leaks. I could go on and on and on.

Weekend people, as city folks are called in the country, have the additional challenge of trying to get service people to talk to you on Saturday and Sunday. And since most of the work is done during the week, when you are in the city, you have all kinds of surprises to look forward to for your Saturday and Sunday. After awhile, you develop a seventh sense about whether the job in progress is going well or not. Recently I had the outside of the barn repainted. I spent a good bit of time at the paint store trying to get a certain ucky-mustardy-off-green impossible shade. The paint store assured me they had caught it perfectly, but I was worried that they might not have. It would be up all over the house by Saturday, and I didn't have time to go up to see. I was fantastically relieved when the painter called, refusing to put it on the barn. "That's the ugliest color I ever did see," he said patiently. "They must have made a mistake." I sighed with relief, for I knew it was precisely right if the painter said he hated it.

The downstairs area has a living room, dining room, kitchen, and bath, with a storage room for furnace equipment, garbage, and catchalls of the century. The upstairs has another living room, three bedrooms, and two baths. If you wonder why two living rooms, I'll confide in you the real secret of a barn. The downstairs is windowless for the most part, and low-ceilinged, and it is not much fun on a wintry day. However, on hot summer afternoons when the thermometer is at ninety-eight, it is twenty degrees cooler downstairs in the barn, since the stone walls are your own personal air-conditioning system. It's also cozy on winter nights with the curtains drawn and the fire roaring. (Why must fires roar?) It's a good cocktail room, and its proximity to the kitchen makes checking of the Sauce Espagnol easy for the hostess. The upstairs living room, however, (More pictures on next two pages. Text continues on page 113)

In contrast to the snug downstairs living room, the upstairs living room is all windows and pure sunlight. This is where the daylight hours are spent, a friendly sort of place that copes with books and couches. The big challenge was: What do you do with a post that goes right through the middle of the room? The big table and bookshelf were simply built around it.

◀ The lamps are newel posts from an old staircase, and the coffee table is part of a series of huge Italian pieces I found. The couch is covered with Ishan, the greatest thing since Betty Crocker's instant mix. It's all nylon and looks like a rich velvet. Even sheep dogs can sleep on it with no ooze effects. It's completely washable and as strong as the proverbial ox. It comes in great colors. I have used it on the walls, too.

This little room is one of my real favorites. When I have guests (no two pairs), I like to sleep in this room. It's cool, green and lilac—and when you wake, it's like being in a treehouse. The wallcovering is a striped fabric, with curtains to match.

SO YOU WANT TO CONVERT AN OLD BARN continued

Two walls of the downstairs floor are fieldstone, painted every year. The cabinets are really room dividers between kitchen and dining room and have deep shelves for storage on both sides. The table seats 15 and almost reaches the pond when open.

The kitchen walls are weathered pegwood, painted blue; the cabinets are black-green. The nicest part of the kitchen is that three people can be out there—one making a souffle, one serving the bourgeoisie, and one drinking—and it's not crowded.

How to step up the loveliness of an already lovely spot

When a good house is added to a great site, wonderful things happen

By CURTIS BESINGER

• One of the intriguing phenomena in life's many experiences occurs when there is a perfect mating of a building and the land it stands on. The Acropolis would not be the impressive and moving thing it is if it did not stand on its high, flat plateau of rock. Many of the world's architectural monuments that have drawn crowds for centuries have this inspired rightness.

A site that has grandeur when unencumbered by a structure has a head start. But grandeur of view has no built-in guarantee of success. In fact, some of the world's most famous and intriguing buildings (like Katsura Palace or the Taj Mahal) have reached greatness partly by what the architect-designer did to modestly endowed land around the building.

Many families who chose a particular site for their house because they wanted to be able to enjoy the qualities of that particular place have found—after their house was built—that they were not able to enjoy the qualities of it to the degree that they had anticipated. For some reason that they do not quite understand, something seemed to have disappeared or to have been lost with the building of the house.

However, other families have found that their house has made the spot seem more pleasant than before, that it made them more aware of the qualities of the place than they previously had been. Dr. and Mrs. James Paulsen and their family, who live in the house shown on these four pages, belong in this latter category. (Please turn the page)

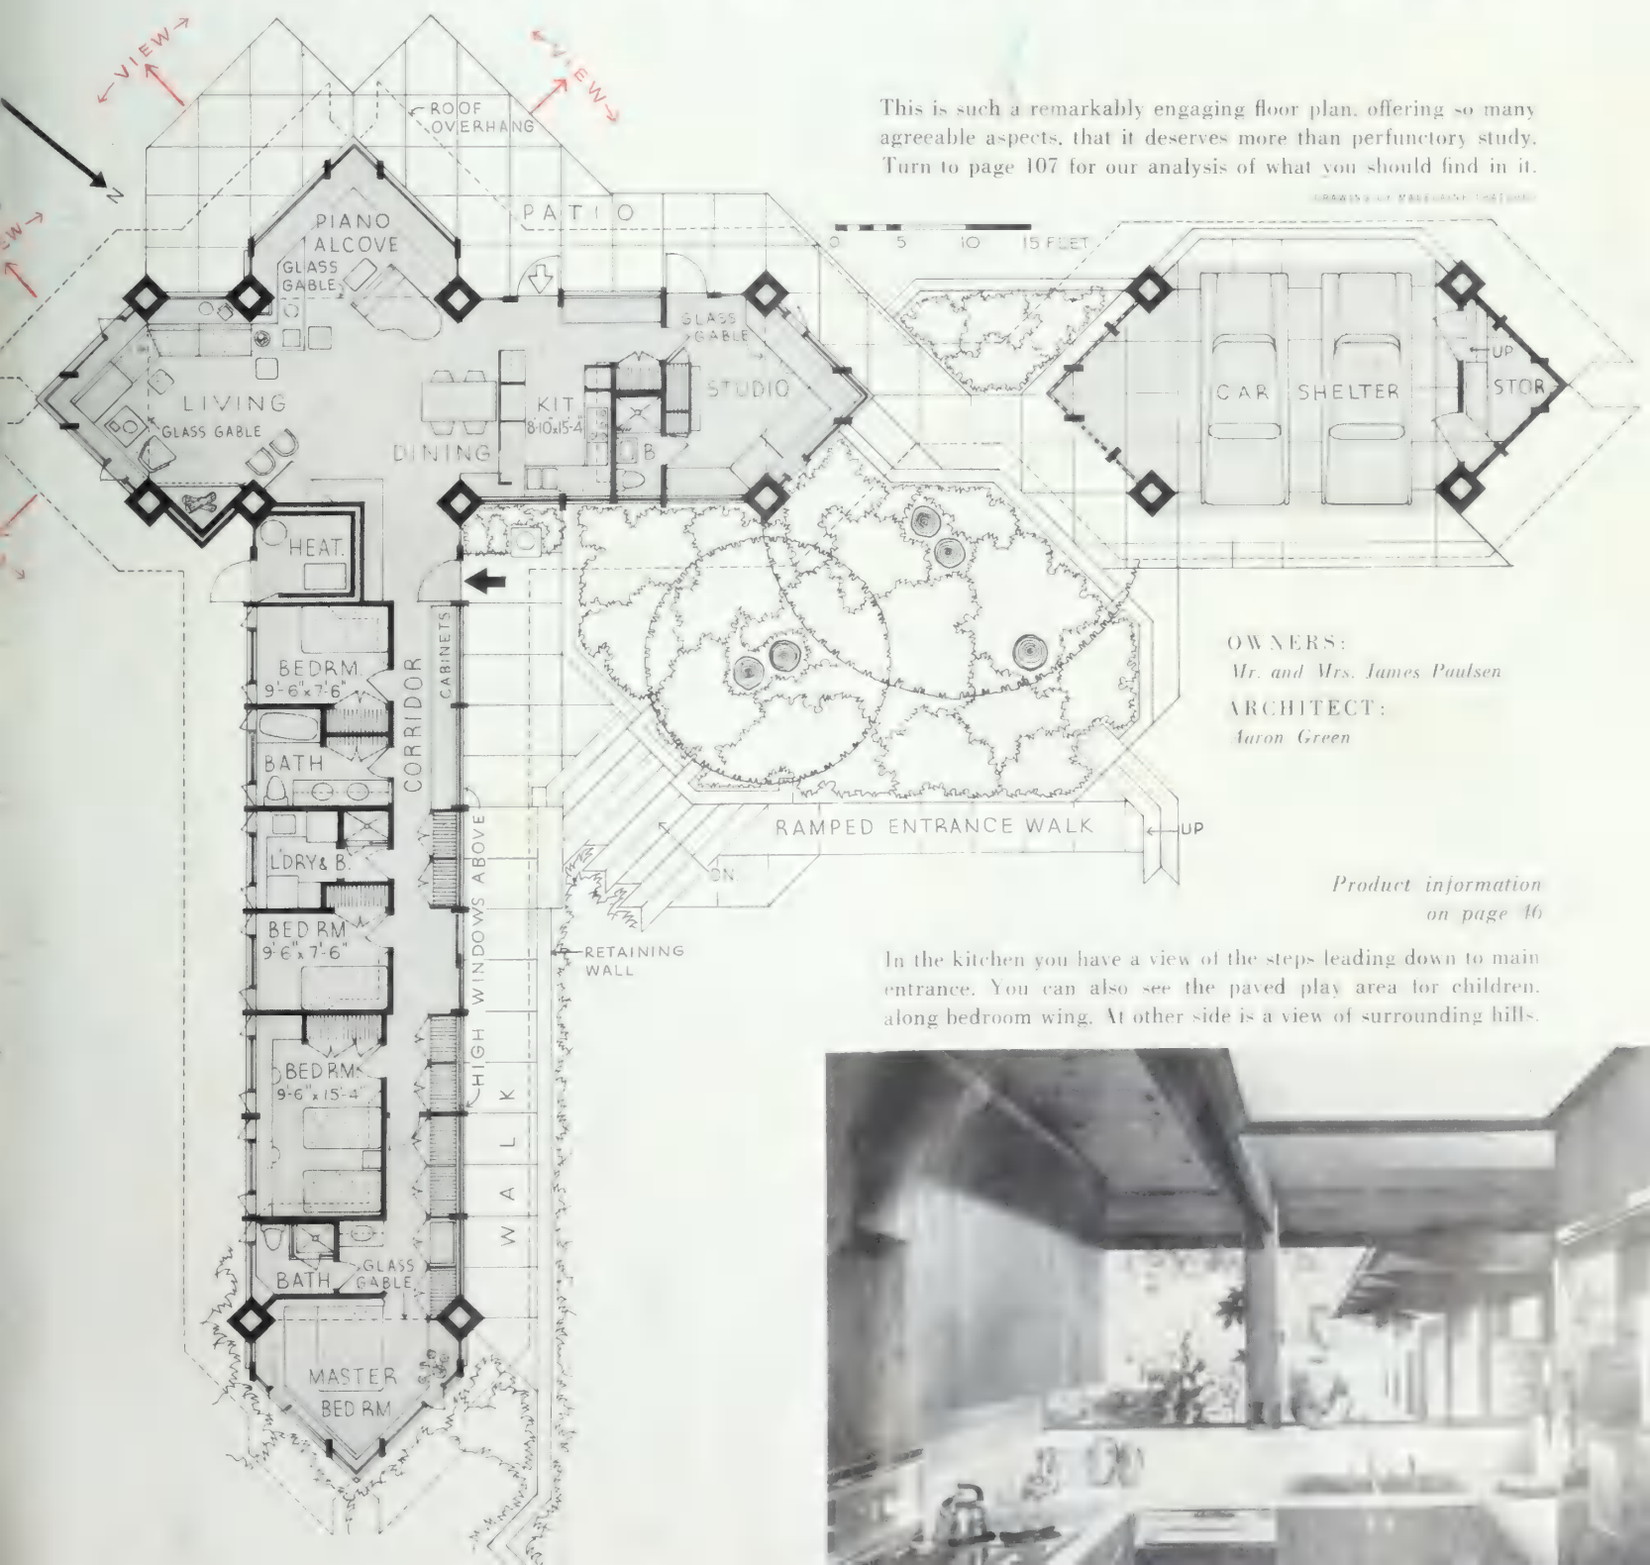
There are houses that seem to remain aloof from their surroundings, and there are others that seem to be welcomed by theirs, living quietly in harmony with them. This house, built in the hills above Menlo Park, California, is one of the latter. Its occupants look out from this modest and unobtrusive exterior and view a landscape handsomely framed by the house's structure.

The living area, seen here from the piano alcove, is typical of the direct and open construction of the house. Its effectiveness as a place in which to live is made up of elements that do not demand attention in themselves, but which, in a simple, direct manner provide a foreground frame for views of the landscape. Note how well the glazed gable ends light the interior.

Above: Entering the main living area, you are presented with a broad panorama of the valley and of the hills surrounding it. This view is framed between the counter forming the window sills, the piers supporting the roof, and the visorlike, flat-roofed areas that pleasantly protect viewer from sunlight and glare.

Below: Seen from the hillside above it, the house, seemingly tucked in under the live oaks, conforms to the general contours of the slope. The carport is partially hidden by the trees and hills at the right. The steps near the center of photo lead down to the entrance. Note relation of glazed gables to flat roofs.



Standing near the living-room fireplace, you have a view through the low-ceilinged piano alcove into the shade of live oak trees. Note glazed gable over piano. The door beyond piano, at right, opens to the dining terrace. Kitchen is in back of low partition.

HOW TO STEP UP THE LOVELINESS

The area in which they wanted to live was the hilly and somewhat wild region above Menlo Park, California. From the site selected for their house, there was a marvelous outlook over a valley surrounded by boldly sweeping, oak-covered hills. This outlook is now an integral and prominent feature of the house, designed for them by Aaron Green, their architect. It is as much a part of the house as are the walls and the roof. And, without any loss of its bold and sweeping lines, the views are now "framed" and presented to them in a way that makes them more easily grasped and comprehended than a 360-degree panorama. What was a vast outlook, too large to be seen as a whole, is now seen in a series of views: each of these is of a size which can be visually taken in and digested. These views are framed by a quiet and harmonious foreground: the structure of the house. But the structure does (Please turn to page 107)

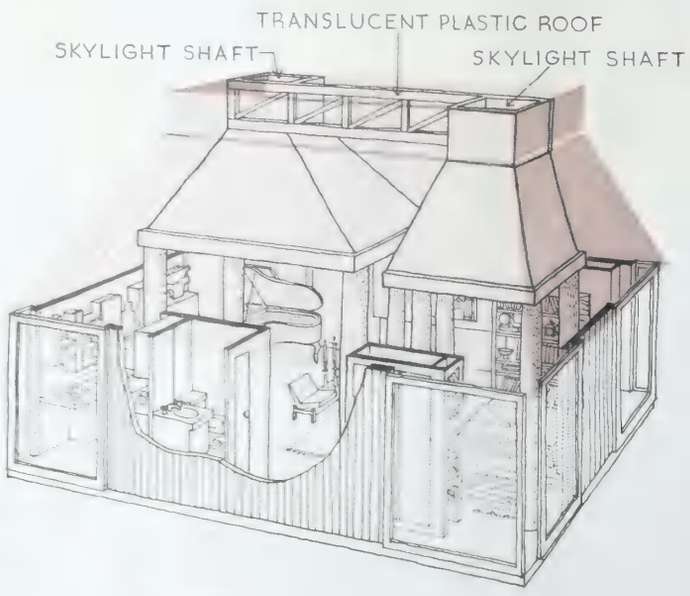
A new way to create a wide-open house



Slide-back panels, hung on traditional barn-door hardware, can turn this house into an open-air pavilion. It's open-and-close system is well suited for mild climates—and for all vacation homes

■ The urgent desire for more beautiful sites, where homeowners can enjoy natural surroundings to their fullest, will eventually cause a change in small-house architecture. Instead of trying to create privacy on restricted suburban lots, the design of even modest-priced houses will focus on opening to all outdoors. With the explosion of houses into more and more of God's-country areas, a wide-open house is really possible.

The house shown on these six pages breaks ground in this new direction. The lot it is on is hardly more than an acre, yet it has its own natural wooded privacy. To make the most of its advantage, Charles Moore, the architect-owner, designed a house that could stand with no walls at all. Eight pine columns, salvaged at $2 each from a factory demolition, are the sole supports, through a network of beams, for the shingled roof that extends well beyond the columns. This frees the outer walls from any supporting function, so that, as you can see in the photographs, huge sections can be slid back completely.

This open-up principle is particularly useful in mild-climate areas, but is also adaptable to vacation houses which must be securely closed for long periods of time, yet easily opened for use. Mr. Moore, chairman of the Architecture Department at the University of California (at Berkeley), makes this his year-round home. He can commute from here to work in eighteen minutes.

The sections of wall that slide back are both solid and glass panels. Thus, when closed against the weather, the house still has many floor-to-roof glass openings. The (More photos on next page. Text continued on page 86)

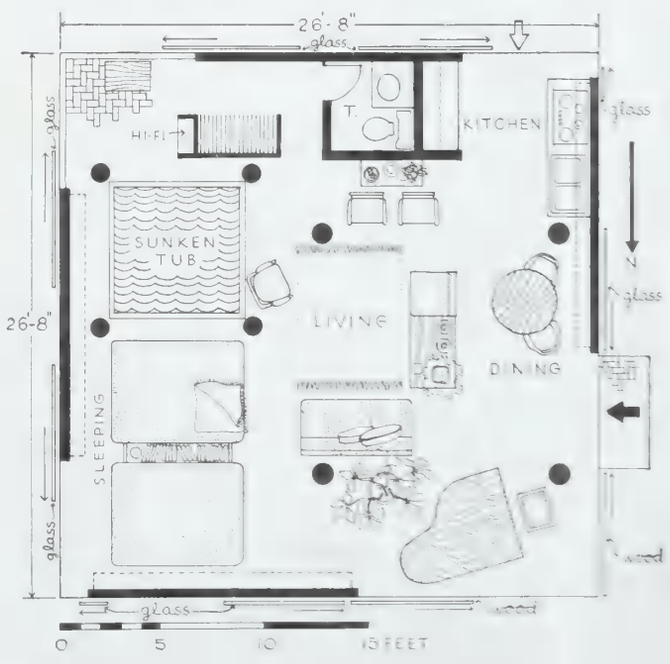
Cutaway drawing shows how two groups of poles support pyramid-shaped, skylit ceiling sections. These in turn support the shingled roof, free of the outside walls. This enables whole sections of the walls to slide away, as seen in the inside and outside views of the piano corner (opposite). Two sections, one of glass and one of thick exterior plywood, have been moved back in these photographs. They ride easily on the overhead wheel-and-track system more commonly associated with barn-door closing. In the upper photograph you can see how cleanly the openings are designed—there is no sill or excessive frame to stop the eye. To see how this corner looks when closed, turn the page.



Compare this with views of piano corner on preceding page to see how wall panels close up house. Door (left) slides separately.

Designed for single occupancy, the house has no partitions in the usual sense. Tall shelves divide sleeping areas. Wall niches were planned for art objects.

Plan below shows simple organization of house for one-man occupancy. Area is roughly 720 square feet. Skylit ceiling sections (each enclosed by four poles) bring in dramatic shafts of light.

Kitchen (above) is tucked into a corner partially screened by the lavatory enclosure. Corner beyond kitchen is wide open in this nighttime shot, gives some feeling of nearness to nature.

panels slide on an overhead rolling track most commonly used for barn-door openings. The solid sections of walls, against which they stack, provide stiffening against earthquake tremors (needed in the San Francisco area).

Overhead light is directed into the house through two skylit, pyramid-shape domes that follow the areas outlined by the poles. Except for the lavatory compartment, the poles and these light wells provide the only separations within the house. One of the pole groups outlines the sunken bathing tub (opposite page). Designed for one-man occupancy at present, this building is only the first of a projected group (see plan, opposite page) that would provide more conventional facilities. ■

Sunken tub has only shower curtain for privacy, but no more is necessary in what are bachelor's quarters. It has something of the Roman-villa quality planned by the architect.

Present house is one of several separate but attached structures planned by Mr. Moore.

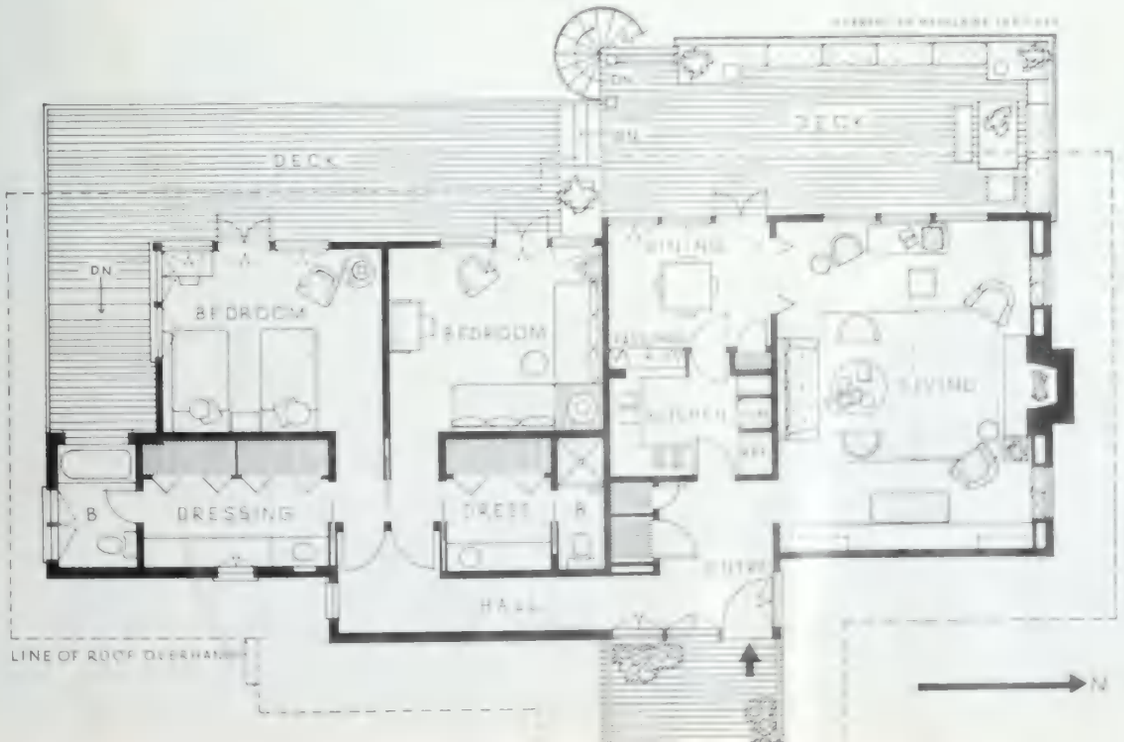
The stylishness of the new rustic life

This house, oriented to the sea and to casual outdoor living on breezy, sunny decks, enjoys the perennial sophistication of good design

• Rustic is as good a word as any for the new kind of dwelling places more and more Americans are choosing, in areas where the natural benisons of field, forest, or seashore can become part of daily life. It's a phenomenon occurring everywhere, but this house on California's Monterey Peninsula is a particularly graphic example of what rusticity means in the modern idiom. The house itself, with its frame construction and roof of cedar shakes, is reminiscent of earlier days. Its broad decks, which open all living rooms to the Pacific and invite casual outdoor meals and sun-lounging, are designed for contemporary tastes. Life can be lived here simply, with easygoing enjoyment, but—and this is the big message—always in an aura of stylishness that surrounds this casual atmosphere with dignity.

ALL PHOTOGRAPHS OF THIS HOUSE BY MAYNARD PARKER

Rusticity has taken on a new meaning in American life, because now it is possible to live in close communion with the natural wonders of the outdoors and yet not inconveniently far from the man-made sophistications—and supplies—of metropolitan centers. Thus a country house need be neither homespun nor quaint.



Houses have forsaken old-time formality, designed as they now are to fill the more relaxed ways of modern living and to be maintained with a minimum of help, if any. Entrance to this house shows how grace and casualness can team up. Court is easily kept gravel. Garden blooms in easily tended pots, boxes.

On the sloping oceanside site, a spiral stair (below) connects house to lower terrace. In high situation, windows are subject to glare from both sky and sea, but see how the ingenious trellislike shutters that were designed to overcome this problem also furnish a distinguishing design motif.

Plan shows how living areas of the house are turned toward the sea, simplified by two modern decks. "Inside-outside" by sliding doors. Dining room opens to outdoors, sights and sounds of nature are always close, but turn the page to see the interior glass of this close-to-nature exhibit.

Broad deck overlooking the Pacific is the equivalent of an extra living area. Meals may be served here al fresco. Parties may overflow casually into the cypress-scented outdoors. This is, in a very real sense, a house that encourages a rustic life, but notice that indoor furnishings have an elegant dignity.

In other days, to live in rusticity had the connotation of making-do, of putting up with whatever equipment was closest at hand. Now, even in remote areas, communications and easy transportation make the loveliest facilities and equipment available. Notice here how the glare-screening treillage device has become a motif.

◀ Owners live as gracefully here as in any town house, surrounded by their favorite art and artifacts. Rawhide-strapped furniture, suggested by early Southwest ranch furnishings, has a close affinity for a Moroccan rug and a fabric print of Spanish derivation, all springing from the same Hispanic design source.

The art of having

By MARVA SHEARER

• Summer house guests run to two extremes: some are wonderful. and some are dreadful. Of course. the same adjectives apply to other seasons of the year. It is simply that events like the World's Fair. school vacations. and summer travel specials encourage a greater number of June. July. and August house guests. This makes the extremes more obvious.

With overnight visitors closer than you think. it might be helpful to examine the range of types. Knowing how to appreciate the choice ones and how to fend off the burdensome variety can be a godsend to any summer hostess. And insight into good guestmanship may improve one's own qualities as a house guest and serve to lift the level of visiting among friends and foreigners to a more cultivated art.

The ideal house guests. as I've observed them. are ones who catch the rhythm or routine of the household. adjust to it. and then add something of themselves to make their stay unique. To get down to cases. most homes are run on some sort of schedule. The guest who asks or notes—what time you get up. where you breakfast. whether or not dinner is the big. evening meal. and at what hour you like to retire—is making some effort to get into step with your family life. Your regime may not be quite suitable for a person who is on vacation and wants to take it easy. but at least you both know where you stand.

As a hostess. I usually encourage these visitors to try to sleep late. but not too late. It's a nuisance for the rest of the household to have to whisper and walk on tiptoe until noon. On the other hand. if the various family members leave home at the crack of dawn. I often write a note explaining that breakfast is in the warming oven. the morning paper is in the library. and I'm off to market. A lot of necessary wifely duties can be accomplished while a guest is sleeping. freeing the rest of the day for visiting.

In a further attempt to adjust to the host's household arrangements. the guests who notice whether or not there is domestic help in the house to make the beds. tidy up the bathroom. and prepare meals are not only considerate. they're priceless. Somehow. I'm always touched and pleasantly surprised by the number of well-brought up men and boys who know how to turn a hospital corner. hang up their clothes. and rinse a plate before putting it into the dishwasher. It may be their rugged military training: it may be their fastidious mothers. Whatever the reason. their quiet self-sufficiency makes entertaining them seem effortless.

At other times. a guest's willingness to help can be more of a hindrance. I recall one sweet schoolgirl. a classmate of my daughter. who volunteered to finish the coffee cake I'd started to mix for breakfast. I showed her as far as I'd gone in the recipe and left her to carry on. At every step she had a new and more baffled question to ask. I patiently guided her through cutting-in shortening. sifting flour. and measuring seasoning. But when she asked. "When does the coffee go in?" I gently but firmly pushed her out of the kitchen.

My advice to house guests is: If a hostess rejects your offer of assistance. clear out of her way and let her work undisturbed. Of course. if there is help in the house. the advice to let them work undisturbed goes double. Good professional help has an even higher regard for their time and duties than most housewives. Any special requests or interruptions in their routine are unwelcome. From the point of view of labor. an appreciative. undemanding guest is ideal.

A conscientious guest will also inquire into the inflexible. long-standing appointments of the host and hostess. It's foolish for anyone, no matter how dear, to assume that their arrival automatically cancels all previous commitments. In today's organized and integrated business and social worlds, arrangements have to be made far in advance of the calendar. Any shift in dates can cause a major protocol shake-up. It's far simpler for a visitor to know exactly when you're busy, so that he, she, or they may make independent plans. I'll never forget how provoked my husband was to learn, after staying one night with a sister-in-law, that we had to shift to another room because our room had been promised, months before, to a couple of visiting prep-school tennis players. It was clearly my fault for not inquiring into my sister's responsibilities as a tennis patron, and making other arrangements.

By the same token, the really thoughtful guests establish early and clearly the reason for their visit. Whether it's for a rest, for business, to meet new people, to sight-see, or merely to have a change makes quite a difference. Any hostess can rise to a certain level of expectation if she knows what is expected of her. All she needs is a few guide lines to know what to plan, how to entertain, and when to slow down to her normal pace.

I've also noticed that the ideal guests, consciously or unconsciously, take into account whether or not you're a smoking or nonsmoking family, athletic or sedentary, drinkers or modest imbibers, readers or talkers. Then, without fuss or comments, they adjust to your tempo and ways. Such minor concessions to the host family's way of life may seem petty but, faced with a long stream of summer house guests, they can make or break the spirit of a hostess. In essence, they are nothing more or less than acts of good breeding and awareness, but putting them into practice helps to incorporate a guest smoothly into the total family framework.

And one thing more. Unfailingly, these considerate people bring bread-and-butter gifts to the hostess, the maid, and the children. Oriental visitors are noted for this charming custom, but many westerners observe it as well. Advance tokens of appreciation do wonders toward mollifying a disgruntled husband, fretful children, and weary wives. They put the whole family into an enthusiastic and hospitable mood and get the visit off to a good start.

Having blended with the family group, ideal visitors go one step further. They bring with them some personal spark, some new ideas, some special interest, or some fresh slant on familiar subjects. Instead of being passive recipients of your hospitality, they are like a fresh breeze blowing through the house. Their very presence is a stimulant. Everyone in the family feels it and is alert and receptive to what they have to offer. The visit may be brief but it revitalizes everyone's spirits—the hosts' as well as the guests'.

The greatest single quality these guests can bring is enthusiasm. If they are enthusiastic about your home, your husband, your children, your way of life, and if they voice their feelings, the attitude is contagious. Such cheering phrases as "What a happy atmosphere" . . . "Everything is so attractive!" . . . "How natural your children are!" . . . "I'm going to try this at home," can wipe out any complacency that you may have developed over the years. You see your personal world in a new light. Through appreciative eyes, it takes on renewed virtues and meaning for you too.

Next best gift is appreciation. Unless you run a kind of Wayside Inn, any guest is extra. Extra linen. (Please turn the page) extra time. extra food. extra frills. No one minds putting forth additional efforts if they're appreciated. For the most part. they are. A short stay with good friends is many times better for the guests than a health farm or psychiatric care. For business associates it's better than staying at a hotel. and a relaxed. hospitable atmosphere makes teenagers reluctant to leave. For hosts. this kind of response means that no visit is too much trouble.

From a purely selfish standpoint. the guests I enjoy most are the ones who come with definite interests and know-how to pursue them. For these visits I am primarily a chauffeur-companion. I've spent many an enjoyable and instructive hour driving a Danish pediatrician to meetings and clinics with American specialists. I've seen the inside of recording studios because of composer friends. I've visited the workrooms of leading ceramists. furniture designers. and silversmiths. I've been in progressive traffic courts and domestic-relations offices because of out-of-town lawyers. I've been behind the scenes at Santa Anita and at the Hollywood Bowl with my house guests. What this all adds up to is that. in exchange for bed and board. my horizons are broadened. my knowledge increased. and my days considerably enriched.

In cases where my house guests write ahead and express the desire to look into certain aspects of our region—schools and colleges. business opportunities. or retirement locations—I often do advance legwork. I research the problem. When they arrive I either send them off with my recommendations or I go along to play an advisory role in the final decision. I've picked up a great deal of miscellaneous information about my own community this way.

Then there are the wonderfully gregarious guests who have such personal magnetism that all my friends want to entertain for them. or else they know so many other people in town that my home is just a base camp. These are the perennial houseparty goers. the night-club devotees. the follow-the-season hedonists. Once in a while it's fun to be attached to one of these social butterflies and attend a round of parties. Exhausting. but amusing.

In the last analysis. the ideal guests are the ones who leave while you and they are still full of ideas. things to talk about. and unfinished business. Then their next visit is eagerly anticipated and lovingly planned.

At the opposite end of the spectrum are the sheer horrors. or various shadings thereof. All of us have our own "Man Who Came To Dinner" types. What baffles me with these characters is that they manage to top their previous performance. and I manage to survive their latest visit.

They follow a fairly prescribed formula. Usually they have not been formally invited but simply announce their arrival. They inform you of the time and flight number so specifically that you know they expect to be met at the airport. Once settled in your home and surrounded by your family. they take over. They make endless requests of anyone within earshot. like "Darling. would you bring me my cosmetic case." . . . "Please mail these letters" . . . "Where's the telephone?" . . . "How I'd love a drink!" . . . They seem oblivious to you and your family's reaction to these demands. Even when the children tactfully disappear to avoid becoming handmaidens to such autocrats as these. they seem not to notice at all.

Nor do they have any regard for the rest of the working world. Because they are on a holiday. they think others are on the same lackadaisical timetable. They drift down for breakfast at noon. They expect a full program of activities and ask quite blithely. "What are we going to do today?" If you do manage a few lukewarm suggestions. they take hours dressing and grooming and getting themselves ready. With no regard for punctuality or distances to be covered. it's up to you to prod and plead and finally practically drag such exasperating guests along with you. Very wearing.

Naturally. after a little nap and liquid pick-up (while you are tending to your home and family). they are ready to do something really exciting in the evening. If you veto this idea by saying there is nothing much going on. they want to sit up and talk until all hours. Very tiring.

These frightening specimens manage to ignore the realities of housekeeping. too. They either use up all the hot water. monopolize the telephone. muss up the newspapers. or upset the help. Gratuitously. they present your maid-of-all-work with hand-laundry. clothes to press. and a list of foods they can't eat. Any one of these acts is enough to precipitate a crisis in the average home. What these lighthearted. feather-brained folk don't seem to realize is that a home is not a hotel.

There are also the well-meaning ones who have the irritating habit of airing their views on everything. They voice their opinions about your community—it's rather provincial; your husband—he works too hard; your children—they're at a difficult age; yourself—you need to get out more. They enjoy telling you what a marvelous time they had as somebody else's house guest. They love repeating gossip. Soap-opera-like tragedies fascinate them. And no confidences are safe with them. They talk too much.

Besides the ones who are full of chatter, there are others who are full of gay ideas. They are apt to propose that you give a party, go dancing, take some pictures, try a new restaurant, etc., for which activities they've brought all the wrong clothes and need to borrow yours. Either they bring very dressy outfits when yours is an informal homelife, or they go to the other extreme and wear Bermudas and jeans. They have vague notions about the climate and assume it will be hot and sunny when all weather predictions are for cold, damp days. Of course, the gracious thing to do is to lend them your good sweaters to match their Capris, and your most stylish rainwear. It's enough to keep your teeth constantly on edge.

And lastly, the ones that beggar all description are the distant cousins and chance acquaintances with large families. The few that have descended on us came by car. To make sure we were home, they called when they were a few hours away. Then they arrived like a plague of locusts—children, parents, pets, paraphernalia, and all their laundry since their previous stopping place. Such visits are appalling but comical, because about all you can do in the face of such gall is be patient and wait until the plague passes.

Toward these and other not-too-rare types, you must be firm and self-protective. Don't let them take over your home and run over you. Tell them where they can catch a sight-seeing bus, do their personal laundry, and get a check cashed. Turn a deaf ear to their hints, and don't hesitate to make your husband the heavy, saying that smoke affects his allergy, he hates dancing, or his doctor wants him in bed by ten. Otherwise your whole family will become victims of professional house guests.

In addition to being sublime or subnormal, house guests fall into other categories, for better or worse. There are the relatives who, by and large, are appreciative, nondemanding, and a joy to have with you. Some of our most delightful house guests have been blood relations. A niece and her four-month-old baby are two examples. We had not had a full-time baby in our home for ages. This one was fun to feed, and hold, and watch.

Then there is my great-aunt who is deaf but a fascinating storyteller and quite a card. One joke about her is that when we asked a neighbor boy to come along with us to pick up this great-aunt, he asked, "How do you know she's so great?" Well, she turned out to be. She'd been a frontier schoolteacher. She'd traveled a great deal, and she remembered all sorts of tales about our family history. We all love it when Aunt Fern comes to visit.

Business associates can be quite divine house guests, too. They don't stay long. They have a singleness of purpose for their visit, around which you can base your conversation, entertainment, and side effects. A really important business guest brings a hostess up to a higher standard of cooking and appearance. In return, I've found business people to be very appreciative.

Old, old friends can be quite wonderful, too. It's interesting to see how you and they have grown together, or apart, or not at all, as the case may be. It's diverting to pick up threads that were broken years before. And it can be a source of satisfaction to let these longtime acquaintances grow to know your family in their own setting. If your husband is indulgent and good-natured, he and the children may get a laugh out of hearing you revive interesting childhood memories.

Young house guests on their own are unpredictable. We've had all kinds—from two European sisters who cried so hard with homesickness that we had to administer tranquilizers, to the young sophisticates who made me furious with their snide remarks about our family's drinking and smoking regulations, to cousins who didn't want to go home. Extremes are both a challenge and a chore. They are curious and they make you appreciate your own offspring more. They serve as either good or bad examples to your children, and they help to prepare them for the time when they, too, will be house guests in someone else's home.

Foreign visitors are my absolute favorites. I don't know what they expect to find in American homes, but my guests have always been surprised. I find it fun to amaze and

PUBLIC UGLINESS IS NOT NECESSARY

Go to Zurich if you want living proof that cities can be beautiful. You'll see the best of architectural and landscape skills at work, combined with touches of humor

By ANNEMARIE KLINGLER

• A paradox seems to have crept into American esthetic life, a split we accept without acknowledging it. In our private worlds we strive for ever greater beauty, using thoughtful imagination in building and furnishing our houses, making time, effort, and money apparent in our gardens and lawns.

But we do not object to spending a great part of every day in incredibly ugly places while going back and forth to our work, shopping, or running errands. In fact, whenever we step out into the public world or into most places of business, ugliness is taken for granted. Acres of bare parking areas, desolate city streets, vacant lots overgrown with weeds, miles of gas stations, and blatant billboards upset us less than the wrong color scheme on our dinner tables. We seem to accept all this hideousness as an inevitable development of industrialization and a rapidly changing society—a state often called "progress"!

Public ugliness is not necessary and can be fixed. This is my conviction after spending a year and a half in Switzerland. The city of Zurich, with half a million population, is a fast-growing business and industrial center, beset by many of the problems such cities share the world over. But even with congested streets, crowded buses and streetcars, parking problems, and unfortunate-looking buildings it is still a delightful place to live. Nowhere—not in its worst industrial sections, or in the mushrooming new housing developments, or in street after street of nondescript late 19th-century houses that surround the lovely old city—nowhere do you get the feeling that ugliness is accepted with resignation. Wherever you go, your eyes find islands of beauty to rest on, man-made beauty demonstrating a determination to make up for earlier indifference and neglect.

How is it done? With trees, with flowers and bushes, with grass even wherever something green will grow, with water and stones—by restoring something of nature wherever a spare bit of ground permits. It is true that with this same treatment in generous sweeps, U.S. parkways are models for the world. But what about our inhabited wastelands?

In Zurich, on a huge, bare city (Please turn the page)

Large public park area in Zurich (above and below) calls for wide, paved space for parking. The unobtrusive hexagonal pattern of brick keeps it from looking purely utilitarian. Islands of hexagonal planters help decorate the space.

At night, the beauty of the city is enhanced by lighting designed to do far more than simply illuminate the streets.

Designed to be viewed from above, the water garden (below) uses small space to delight the building occupants.

Attractive groupings of evergreen planters (above) and seasonal flowers (below) invite passers-by to take a second look. Planters serve a practical purpose in discouraging illegal parking more successfully than a "No Parking" sign.

A playground of wading pools and large climbing boulders is a boon to mothers as well, since children are too absorbed to stray away.

Placed along wide, tree-lined sidewalks, these large rock slabs fit the natural setting and serve strollers as both a bench and a table.

Just a few steps away from a busy highway in Zurich, a narrow band of land has been transformed into this island of peace and relaxation.

square with intersecting bus and streetcar lines, big planters are massed on the traffic islands, filled overfull with flowers to create bold splashes of color. Often the solutions are permanent and so well integrated into their surroundings that they seem always to have been there. An unsightly slope between two street levels is landscaped with a few boulders artistically arranged, some well-chosen evergreens, a few particularly well-shaped, rounded tufts of grass.

The circle where the bus turns around at the end of the line is a small garden oasis. A bench under an apple tree saved from more rural times, water splashing in a fountain, some shrubs, and a small lawn help to change the waiting time to a moment of relaxation.

Parking lots between business blocks are outlined with trees interplanted with low shrubs to provide shade and cut the glare of sun on asphalt and metal. An empty space between tall buildings becomes a water garden especially designed to be viewed from above, with water rippling over pebbles in shallow basins and lily pads floating on a darker, deeper pool.

Small parks in the industrial quarters and big parks near the lakes manage to have an air of tempting freshness, inviting use by many people. Such oases can be found in even the busiest sections of town—for a quiet stroll, a short lunch break, or to romp and play.

Zurich's attitude toward all this public beauty is notable because nothing is left at the stage of the halfhearted gesture. There is no shabby little park with a few weary trees and benches in dusty gravel, so characteristic of older cities. Nowhere can you see the bedraggled bed of petunias, the few pots of yellowing geraniums, the spindly, slowly dying evergreens found often before gas stations, supermarkets, and factories in the U.S., where their discouraging appearance often deters any further effort.

Whatever is undertaken is done with imagination, great skill, often a touch of humor and lightheartedness, and, not to be ignored, a generous application of well-rooted manure to achieve the healthy vigor shown by all plants. It is the work of professionals who know design, know plant materials and understand the needs of plants in different situations.

The lead in this development is taken by the Zurich City Garden Department, a young department for such an old city. Until 1858 it was not needed, since the walled city had no space for parks. When at that time the walls were leveled to make room for the rapidly growing population, the first city gardener was appointed to take care of six small public areas planted mostly to trees, each one smaller than half a block. He also had to care for one public forest on the outskirts of town. Zurich, therefore, in contrast to other European cities, has not a centuries-old tradition of public parks and gardens, and can thus be reasonably compared to most American cities.

The progress of this department was stalled for some time by a prolonged struggle over a plan promoted by "progressive" citizens to put the new railroad station and all its maze of tracks on the shore of the lake, cutting off the city from its most beautiful natural feature. One foresighted, dedicated man, fighting at the head of a small committee, finally succeeded in preventing this irrevocable disaster and saving the lake unspoiled for the city. The railroad station was placed at the other end of the town, and a quay and promenade were built along the lake shore to add to the other public grounds.

From this beginning, Zurich's Garden Department has grown until its 1963 operating budget was $1,923,486, plus $700,000 for new projects. This reflects the increase in population, in this hundred-year period, from 19,758 to half a million, and the increase in size of the city from 373 acres (just over half a square mile) to 21,332 acres (33.3 square miles). But very much (Please turn to page 112)

There's more than one reason for going to Zurich

By ELIZABETH GORDON

After Hong Kong, it is probably the Number Two shopping town of the world

• There I was, last December, taking off on a TWA jet to slide on the ski slopes of the Swiss Alps. I was under the illusion that these manly, virile mountains were the end-all of Switzerland. (I had never been in Switzerland before, since the fueling stops at Geneva or Zurich do not count.) Like so much of life, you think you are zeroing in on one thing, but in reality something else zeros in on you. So though the mountains around Zermatt are incredible—for looking at or sliding down—what really "sent" me were the wonderful shopping possibilities of the city of Zurich.

First, you must understand that shopping is to me what golf or stamp collecting is to others. I shop when I have no money and no needs. Shopping is educational looking, and I have done it all over the world. In foreign countries it is the best way to sense the nature of the people quickly. What they buy for themselves tells you—fast—what kind of people they are and how they live.

Now back to Zurich. It is a kind of "sleeper" as far as Americans and shopping go. We've heard about the merchandise enticements in London, Paris, Rome, Venice, Milan, etc. But the truth is that in the last ten years the prices have skyrocketed, the quality plummeted, and the styling gone wacky. The last time I was in London, six months ago, I did not feel moved to open my purse even once. And sixteen months ago when I was in two old favorites, Paris and Milan, I did not crave a thing I saw.

Therefore, Zurich was an eye-opener. It was like the good old days in Paris, when everything was beautiful and half the price you'd pay at home. Yet nobody I know ever mentioned the values and prices you find in Zurich. In fact, none of my traveling friends mentioned Zurich at all, in any connection.

So I was totally unprepared to find that the real Fifth Avenue of Europe is the Bahnhofstrasse, the main street of the downtown area, which runs from the railroad station to the lake in Zurich. It is not a long street and can easily be traversed on foot. Both sides are lined with truly elegant shops with extremely well-styled merchandise at prices that seem very commendable by comparison with those of New York or leading European cities. And the side streets leading off the Bahnhofstrasse likewise have quality shops, perhaps not so fine but offering high-quality goods.

The quaint and charming quarter called the Old Town, between the Bahnhofstrasse and the Limmat River, might be compared to Madison Avenue in (Please turn to page 124)

BURGLARS

The 10 Best Ways to Outwit Burglars

There is almost no way to make your house absolutely burglar-proof. But there are many ways to make it so discouraging burglars will pass it by

By DAVID X. MANNERS

• If a burglar wants to get into your house, he can. If he's determined, almost nothing you can do will keep him out. But you still do have a chance against him. You can make it so that no burglar wants to get in.

By definition, burglary is the entering of a house when no one is there. If someone is home, the crime becomes robbery and the penalties are far more severe. That's why housebreakers will inevitably go elsewhere if they think you're home or likely to come home. So your first maneuver is to make them think you're home.

Many people naively reveal that they're away. When they go out for the evening, they switch off all lights. Worse yet, they leave on only an outside light. It's the clearest possible signal to a burglar that the coast is clear. The burglar may telephone first, to verify that no one answers. He may ring the doorbell as a final check. Then he's ready to go to work.

Most burglars work in groups of two or three. Usually one will drop his confederates off at the job, then drive around and come back later to pick them up. In that way no suspicious car is parked near the house.

Ordinary locks are no problem to these professionals. As any police officer can tell you, "Locks are only to keep honest people honest." They remove temptation from the weak-willed; to a burglar they offer small resistance. In most cases he has only to hit the door with his shoulder, or kick it open. Most latches are set into a thin strip of soft wood, and the grain runs the right way for easy splitting. The lock may hold, but unless the door frame is steel, it will give way.

If there are neighbors close by, or if it's an apartment he's entering, he can "loid" the door. This is done by slipping a Celluloid credit card or an airline "seat occupied" sign between the jamb and the door and pushing the latch back. If the door has a dead bolt, a device that won't shove back, the burglar can pick its lock. With a small steel hook, he puts tension on the lock cylinder, as if he had a key in it and were trying to unlock it. With another hook he probes inside the keyhole and pushes up the lock tumblers (usually five) one by one. Because of the tension, they stick as lifted. When all are up, the cylinder is free to turn and the lock is open. Burglars practice picking locks the way a ball player practices batting. A good one can pick a lock in ten to thirty seconds.

Chain locks are designed as a protection against molesters and robbers as well as burglars. They enable you to answer a door without giving access. But they are not complete security, even when installed properly.

If the chain lock is installed with the slide for the chain running horizontally, a burglar can open it with a rubber band and a piece of cellophane tape. If the slide is set at an angle, it foils the rubber-band-and-tape trick, but it won't stop the burglar. Usually, a chain lock is held by only four screws. Hit the door a solid thump with a shoulder and the whole thing, including screws, will go sailing across the room.

This is not to say all locks are useless, or that it is a waste of money to get the best offered. The more deterrents you place in the way of a burglar, the better. If nothing else, they delay him, and the longer he has to linger on a job, the better the chance he will be discovered before he can complete his work.

1. Good locks

Dead bolts offer the most security. You can buy these for surface (rim) mounting on the inside of an existing door without disturbing your present lock. Many people put a knob-turned dead bolt on a door but place it near a pane of glass. All the burglar has to do is chip out a small hole in the glass or shove the glass in and he can reach through and turn the lock.

In such situations, dead-bolt locks that are key-operated from the inside are recommended. Even if the burglar breaks out the glass, he's in no position to pick the inside lock. Or if you have vulnerable glass near a door, replace it with heavy, tempered glass. It will (Please turn to page 110)

Cold foods maintain their temperature for hours in this brand-new two-piece covered bowl of Plexiglas. Crushed ice may be used as shown here for its festive look, but the dead air space between the two bowls provides amazing insulation by itself. Thermo bowl by Thermalene 73 Div., Mastercraft Medical and Industrial Corp.; costs about $20.

New double-wall insulated servers are wonderful for picnics and serving out of doors. This one has an aluminum liner that can go into the refrigerator or freezer. Used here to hold shrimp-filled avocados, it will keep them chilled for several hours. "Thermo-Serv" serving dish, about $10; beverage server, about $9. N.F.C. Engineering Co.

With an electric ice crusher and a tray of cubes, you can have crushed ice in minutes for chilling drinks or crisping vegetables. There are several good ones on the market, including this new Quick Crusher accessory for a Hamilton Beach blender. It comes with its own Styrofoam bucket. Chrome Liqui-Blender with ice-crusher attachment, about $73.

not compete with the views for attention. The views are dominant, the house recessive.

The family lives within this foreground and in an interior space set deep and secure within an unobtrusive exterior. From this interior they look out on the valley and the surrounding hills. They see these framed between the constructional elements of the house. It should be emphasized here that these are constructional elements, essential parts of the house, not merely extraneous features.

The wood and masonry piers support the roof; they also direct attention to segments of the total view. These are segments which can be readily perceived by the human eye, and appreciated. This kind of framing is not too different from the act of the artist when, in painting a landscape, he selects only a particular segment of it to be presented. By this selection he may help us to be more aware of the whole landscape.

The flat roof that surrounds the gabled-roofed areas of the house is also a part of the frame. And it is a strong horizontal plane that helps to give a quality of depth to the interior space—and to the view seen from it. This visorlike flat roof reduces sky glare and shades the viewers, so that eying the vista is pleasanter. (Houses on hilltops have a sky-glare condition greater than other houses, and the design should anticipate this.) And by eliminating the need for curtains or drapes, which are often installed to keep out sun and glare, (and without so intending, the view) it keeps the panorama visible.

The broad counters at the window sills are also a part of the frame that gives depth to the view. These are also functional storage spaces, desks, or tables.

The floor plan

The advantages of the "T" plan are well illustrated in this house, where all the bedroom traffic is channeled to the left of the entrance. There is no traffic from the kitchen or studio, both of which have outside doors. The living room is truly a private place, and in each of its two alcoves music or conversation can continue without interruption from people passing.

Angled walls and angled piers of the alcoves are designed to provide views in two directions. Both the furniture and cabinet-work in the living room are intentionally kept low and do not interfere with the sweep of space. The built-in cabinets wrap around the adjoining spaces and tie them together. The low partition that screens the kitchen does not interfere with the continuous flow of space above. The kitchen is designed for privacy without use of doors.

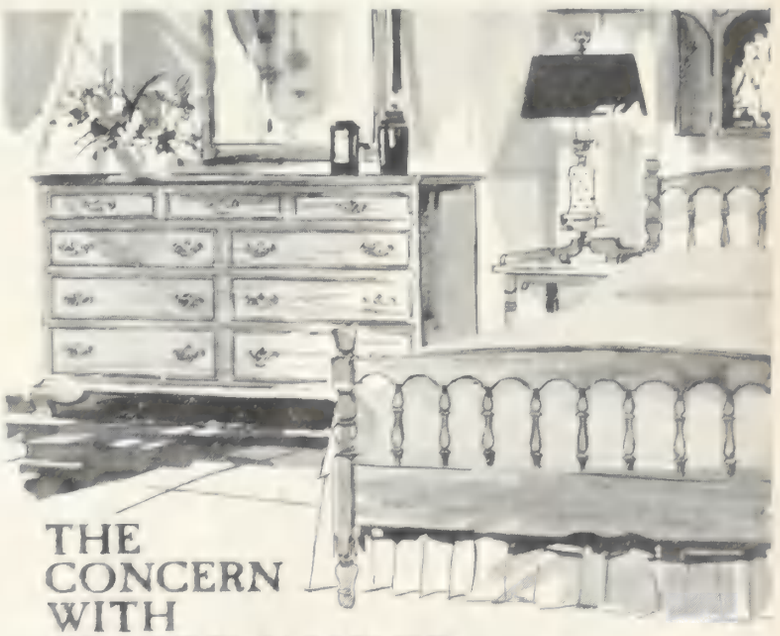
A concern for use can be found throughout the plan. It is in the separation of the service and main entrances. It is in the location of the combination laundry and bath in the bedroom wing.

The lighting plan

To bring more natural light into the interior—which might have otherwise seemed somewhat dark because of the broad eaves—and to achieve a better distribution of light within the interior, other light has been introduced. It is brought in above the flat roofs that surround the house and through the glazed gable-ends of the sloping portions of the roof. This slope of the roof, which is also the interior ceiling, gives extra height to the interior space achieved without a loss of the intimacy suggested by the lower surrounding roof.

The light introduced through the gables gives a cathedral-like quality of light to the interior. It also diminishes the contrast between interior and exterior light values. In addition to the direct sunlight that enters the rooms through them, light is also reflected from the flat roofs to the surfaces of the sloping ceilings and in turn down into the interior. This fills the interior with a soft and mellow quality.

This particular light quality of the interior is further enhanced by the position of the house in relation to the live oaks under which it seems to have been nestled. These protect the living area from the low rays of the late-afternoon sun. But one also looks out into the shade of these trees at other times of the day. Some light entering the house filters through these trees.



Very often in discussions of architecture it is implied that esthetic qualities cannot be achieved without sacrifice of convenience. A more pertinent approach to this problem would be to admit that it is much simpler to achieve one of these independently of the other and without being concerned for both at the same time. Obviously it is a more difficult task to achieve both simultaneously and in the same project. ■ a gorge, you see strata of such rock, layer on layer, not too much different from the courses of masonry in the house walls. Wood, stone, and glass are the complete palette of important structural and finishing materials. The simplicity of the palette means there is almost never an interruption in the flow of space by switching to a different material.

The house builds its drama slowly. Entrance is by an unemphasized door. Inside, you can glimpse but not totally see what lies beyond. There is the promise of things around corners. The floor is stone, as are the walls. What is not stone is naturally finished wood. Overhead is the sloping underside of the roof, its beams exposed. The simplicity suggests strength. Nothing is concealed; you can see how all is built.

The stone, and the way it is laid with bold, almost reckless variation, arouses the senses. It is no flat, easy-to-grasp wall. It has never-to-be-plumbed depths. In it is part of the draw of the log cabin, of the worn antique, of the touch of human hands. It is a rejection of the slick and superficial.

You are aware that your vista is enlarging, the ceiling soaring, opening to the sky, the walls opening to the outdoors. You have a sense of elevation, for you are looking off into the tops of trees, and you realize you are on a balcony and that the major area of the house is below.

Space is the most important element an architect has to manipulate. He unfolds his house to you carefully, like a playwright. By timing and proportion he can create anticipation, drama, even a soaring climax. If he is successful, he delivers more than you expected. The balcony and the living room below it are just such a dramatic event.

It is not just a whim of style. It is the natural solution to the slope and of accommodating to the change in level. It gives the living room dramatic importance, and the balcony preserves the quality of the hill and the outlook you have on a hill.

Look at the photograph on page 63 and you will see how two tall center stone columns support the two great beams of the roof. Observe that there is no central ridge beam holding up the roof, as in traditional houses. To have a center beam would mean a center column to support it, and this would cut the view right down the middle, blocking the eye just where it should be focused. Instead, you see the planes of the roof at their joining: the roof becomes part of your awareness of the space and how it was arrived at.

Window framing reminds you that a window is a window, and glass is most often successful when you are unaware of it. Here, all fixed glass continues without interruption into walls and columns. It touches floor and ceiling without interposing a barrier. You see ceiling and floor continue beyond what are the technical limits of the room, and then you realize there are no real limits. The total space is more than the enclosed space. The stone walls outside are in no way differentiated from those inside. The same for the floor and ceiling. There is no demarcation line in the close union of house and nature. You walk outdoors with no change in floor level or even change in the flooring underfoot.

The living room measures 20′ by 20′, but it has other important dimensions. It has a height of 17′. This vertical space contributes as much to a sense of freedom as horizontal space—in some ways, more. Ten steps up or down is a greater separation than ten steps on the level. It creates new aspects and vistas, wrings more out of the limited space of the house. From the balcony, you see the living room in a completely different perspective. The balcony, in turn, has a different aspect from the level below. Both levels, though distinct in character, are inseparable in concept. Add them together and you get a space 42′ long, which is the real dimension of the living room.

To the right and left of the balcony are bedroom extensions. Under the lower spread of the roof, their quality is one of intimacy and withdrawal. But there again these areas are not separate from the total space. The entrance to each is a floor-to-ceiling opening 8′ wide. Even when the opening is closed off by a folding door, the glass above the door permits a view of the continuity of the ceiling into these areas, so the tie is never lost.

Each bedroom also has its extensions: a terrace for each, leading outdoors at floor level, and a balcony for each, overlooking the outdoors as the dining balcony overlooks the living room.

In building a house, you design for this day and its needs. You shape structure and select materials on the basis of the best that modern technology offers. But you can't overlook the lessons of the past. You may re-evaluate, but it is unwise to ignore.

In the Ozarks, where this house is located, the traditional architectural concept is the "dogtrot." This is a house with a hallway down its middle and a room on each side of it. The point is that on hot nights a breeze blows down this hall, and it is a good place to sit or to sleep.

The climate-control lesson of the dogtrot is not overlooked in this house. From south bedroom to north bedroom the house is completely openable, and breezes sweep through this corridor. Unlike the classic dogtrot, however, this new version has the added virtue of control. By manipulating one or both of the sliding glass doors at the end of the "hall," the breeze can be speeded up or choked off. It is this kind of evaluation of tradition and improving upon it that can help you wherever you build.

The owners change their bedroom with the season. The north bedroom is the summer bedroom. By leaving the street-side south windows open, it is possible to get the blow-through breeze without any infringement of privacy. The south bedroom is the winter bedroom. It is cheerfully sunny and warm by day. At night, for privacy, curtains are drawn. There is no need in this season for the breeze.

Life in a wilderness house is inevitably informal. Tramping in the woods, you don't want to worry about tracked-in mud. Too busy with more important matters, you can't waste much time housekeeping. That's why materials that can't be hurt and which require minimum maintenance are a decided advantage. The floor in this Arkansas house is never waxed or scrubbed—just vacuumed. A special sealer applied to the stone keeps it from "dusting off." Walls are vacuumed once a year. In the clean, highland air, windows need washing only twice a year, another bonus in fleeing the metropolis. Outside, the yard doesn't make many demands, either. It is just honest, natural landscape, undisturbed and unspoiled. ■

DRAWING BY MARELLA NE

Denver is a city that has great possibilities for living a double life. Map, left, shows how far from downtown you can get in 40 minutes. Part-time ranching in the high country, farming on the plains, or roughing it in the mountains are now practical, with the new interstate highways.

these, will be acquired in the future by those with the foresight and imagination to use the new roads as routes of discovery, and as a way to get more land. You can use the fast new roads to take you quickly to a much more comfortable climate.

The Interstate is a new kind of road. It has the wide median strip of greenery between lanes of traffic, the long sight-lines, easy curves, and gentle grades of the turnpikes and thruways. And like these more familiar highways, all the access roads enter by way of parallel acceleration lanes, and all crossroads go over or under.

The difference is that the Interstate System also has much shorter distances between access roads, and includes well-planned beltways around the perimeter of cities.

The beltways allow through traffic to avoid the downtown traffic, but they are still near enough the center of town to be used in driving to work from the country.

The access roads will average only 4 miles apart when the entire 41,000 mile system is finished. This is what makes it possible to use this road every day to get out of town into the country nearby.

This ready access will give this network of roads an impact on land use unmatched since the railroads first spanned the continent. New towns will come into being. More and better shopping centers will rise beyond the suburbs. And the beltways will relieve downtown traffic congestion.

The Interstate System is a Federal-State project. The money comes from the Highway Trust Fund, which is made up of taxes from highway users. The United States Bureau of Roads administers the fund and apportions the money to the States, who actually build the roads to established specifications. Exact routes and priorities are up to the State.

What you will get out of this 41-billion dollar expenditure depends on how you use it. You won't get much, if it serves only as an occasional route to some far-away place. On the other hand, you can make it a very important part of your everyday life.

It can be a vital link between mankind and the natural scene from which our age conspires, in so many ways, to keep up apart. It can be a welcome escape from the crowding, lack of privacy, and soul-deadening monotony of look-alike houses on checkerboard lots. ■ four feet to improve the exterior scale and the interior space. The roof line was changed completely, and the decorative carpenter-gothic verge boards and brackets were added to give the house the required character. The new balcony, with its decorative railing, extends all the way around the house and serves every major room.

The house was put back on the exact location of the original. This was done to make it a remodeling instead of a new structure. A new house in this area must be set back from the water, which would have made it impossible to moor the boat adjacent to the house. It is somehow reassuring to know that such dreams can come true. ■

You can profit by his mistake

He tried to sell his house himself—without the help of a Realtor®

You face five dangers when you try to sell your house yourself. You may:

1. not know the market.
2. be harassed by a parade of curiosity seekers.
3. have to cope with bargain hunters.
4. neglect your job to play salesman.
5. expose your family to perils from strangers.

A Realtor—a professional who has contacts, knowledge, and experience in selling houses—will:

1. help you, the owner, set a fair market price.
2. suggest highlights that make your house most saleable.
3. find just the right family.
4. make a skilled sales presentation.
5. handle the complicated negotiations.
6. help the buyer find financing.
7. take care of the bothersome details

To sell your house quicker . . . and for its fair market value, look for this seal of your Realtor. Only a Realtor—a member of the National Association of Real Estate Boards and of his local board who subscribes to the professional standards of an established Code of Ethics—may display it.

foil attempts to cut it, and it is many times harder to break.

You can improve the performance of an existing spring-latch lock by driving three or four finishing nails into the doorstop in front of the latch. This will prevent anyone's inserting a thin blade under the stop and pushing the latch back.

A chain lock adds extra security. Some new chain locks are key-operable. This has the convenience of permitting entrance by key after others have retired. It also lets you attach the chain when you leave the house. This can fool would-be burglars into thinking someone is home. Apartment dwellers can put the chain lock on and the superintendent or other person with a master key can't get in while they're away.

Many more illegal entries are gained through a back door, or a door inside a garage, than through a front door. Many people are careless about leaving garage doors open. Automatic garage door operators make it easier to keep garage doors shut at all times. There is also added safety in being able to turn on the lights in the garage and open its door without leaving your car. For long-term absence, holes may be drilled in the overhead rails of garage doors and an extra padlock inserted.

2. Secure windows

Windows are an easy way in. Many old windows are easily pushed through. Or it's simple to cut a small hole, insert a hand, and open the sash lock.

Key-operated window locks are better. Also good (in the case of double-hung windows) are tenpenny nails inserted in holes drilled at an angle through the upper rail of the bottom sash into the lower rail of the upper sash. Two nails, one on either side, can hold a window so securely it can't be opened short of completely wrecking it.

Storm sash and screens make windows more difficult to get in. So do grilles. These may be padlocked and be removable for cleaning of windows. But don't put one on a window if there may ever be the possibility you may want to use it as an escape from fire.

If you live in an apartment, never decide a window is inaccessible, even if it is many stories above ground. Burglars are often quite fearless.

The windows in newer houses are usually easier to get in than those in older houses. These newer houses are built on a slab, or are otherwise lower. But even higher windows of an older house are no problem if the homeowner has left a ladder out. If your ladder is locked up, the burglars may borrow one next door, but it's not likely.

3. Alarm Systems

Police rate alarms highly. They prefer the silent kind, connected by wire to headquarters or to a private security agency such as Holmes. There is then a chance to nab the burglars in the act and put them out of circulation. Holmes have their own men who respond to an alarm. They also notify the police. Burglars have a healthy respect for protection-agency labels in windows.

Local alarms are ones that set loud bells ringing or sound a siren. Some turn on bright lights. They are designed to scare burglars off, and they usually do that in a hurry. Alarms of this kind can be effective even when no one is around to respond to them. Look in your telephone book under "Burglar Alarm Systems." One kind works by radar. Anything moving within its range will set it off. Another works by sonics.

But alarms have their limitations. It's expensive to wire all doors and windows into a system, and burglars have an uncanny sense for picking unprotected spots and getting through. (They can still go through the roof or a wall.) Alarms also require continual attention. You have to remember to set them every time you go out and shut them off every time you come into the house.

4. Watchdogs

Almost any dog that barks at strangers can be of some help, especially if the burglar thinks someone is around to hear the barking. A small terrier can be more worrisome than a large hound. But burglars have a way of handling most dogs. Some have been known to rub a beef hockbone on hands and legs. It gives them a scent that is said to win immediate friendship. Others use a fire extinguisher as a pacifier. Of course if you are away from the house for any extended period, your dog isn't likely to be around either, and an empty kennel may be just another come-ahead signal to a burglar.

The best watchdogs are police dogs or Dobermans, professionally trained for the purpose. After training, they aren't house pets. Inquire at local kennels for information about professional watchdog trainers.

5. Neighbors

Your neighbors can be the greatest help, but don't depend on them to watch over your house unless you have a definite understanding.

If you are going to work with neighbors, make the arrangements clear. Let them know when and where you are going. Have them copy down the license numbers of any cars parking in your driveway and immediately report any suspicious visitors to the police. You can do the same for them when they go on vacation.

6. Police

In most communities, the police have a program for protecting homes when owners are absent. In Norwalk, Connecticut, for example, each tour of duty checks every house on their "dark house" list. This means that three times in every 24-hour period, a patrol car will pull up to the house and an officer will get out and try doors and check windows.

The chances that a patrol car will come by just at the time burglars are around is slight. But it does mean that any burglary will be promptly discovered, and it's far easier to do something about it then than two or three weeks later when the owners return. Patrols also discourage burglary. Any good burglar will know if a house is police-protected. That makes it an added risk. In large cities, or in other areas where such service is not available, private-guard and watchman protection is obtainable on an individual or neighborhood basis.

In vacation areas, posting of notices against trespassing and offering a $50 reward for information leading to the arrest of anyone committing burglary is an effective program. The size of the reward is small, but to a burglar it means that anyone seeing him has a good reason for calling the police department.

7. Safes

If you have important jewelry, cash, or negotiable securities, put them in safe deposit at the bank when you leave your house for any extended period. Then you'll be sure to have them when you get back. Unless a home safe is extremely heavy, it can be put on a dolly and taken away for opening at leisure. Some people bolt a safe down, only to discover that bolts can be cut. To protect bolts, set a pipe loosely over them. If anyone tries sawing, the pipe will revolve and the saw will get nowhere.

The usual place of concealing a safe is at one side of a clothes closet. Clothing hanging on the rod is supposed to conceal it. Unfortunately, burglars know this trick. They also look behind pictures. That's why some people wire the picture covering their safe to an alarm system.

Don't hide the combination behind the safe. That's the first place burglars look (and with frequent success). They also look in drawers. They have a sharp eye for locating anything that looks like a combination. If a trusted employee leaves, have the combination changed for his protection. Otherwise, when the safe is burglarized, he may be suspected.

8. Reliable help

Don't be casual about the hiring of domestic help, particularly on a temporary basis. Most people needing help merely phone an employment agency. If they check references, they don't evaluate carefully enough how significant the references are. One important factor commonly overlooked is verifying that an employee actually lives at the address he has given you.

Dishonest help will stay on the job only long enough to know where important jewelry and furs are kept, and abscond with them, or tip off friends on the outside about them. When the coast is clear, they'll come in and make a haul.

When work is being done on your house, and many workmen and strangers are coming and going, be careful about exposing anything of special value or attractiveness. If they don't take it immediately, this is a good time for the dishonest to size up your house, assess its weak points, and arrange for an after-hours entry.

Don't assume you have nothing of important value to a burglar. Television, radios, Hi Fis, cameras, tape recorders, musical instruments, liquor, power tools—all these are quickly negotiable. Burglars who will take anything are usually from low economic levels, narcotic addicts, and mental cases. Typically, they work alone.

Professional burglars are a breed apart. They are much like confidence men, well dressed and smooth talkers. They can talk their way out of tight situations.

9. Diversionary tactics

The best insurance against burglary is to make your house appear occupied at all times. Professional burglars know when you are going to be away. They even read the society page, wedding announcements, and obituaries.

When you go on vacation, cancel newspapers, milk deliveries, and have mail forwarded. Hiring a telephone answering service is not a bad idea. A continuously unanswered phone is almost certain evidence of your absence. If you have a car of secondary value, leave it in the driveway. It looks as if you're home. Remove the distributor cap on the engine so they don't steal the car.

Leave house lights on. Some burglars aren't fooled by one light. They'll phone to see if it's just a ruse. Two lights are more realistic and convincing. They should not be night lights. Make them at least 40 watt, and have them in two separate areas. Better yet, have lights that are controlled by timers ($12) or photoelectric cells ($15). They'll then come on at dusk and prevent the possibility of anyone observing them burning on through the day. If you want to draw shades or curtains, do it just enough so outsiders can't tell if anyone's inside. Don't obscure the lights.

Typically, house burglars operate during the day or early evening. To operate after midnight makes them too obvious. They may strike when the housewife goes out to shop. They will know her habits from previous observation. Even 15 minutes is enough time to make a haul. She knows she'll be back soon, so she doesn't bother to lock doors. The burglars are also aware of that.

If you should return to your house at anytime and notice prowlers when you turn into the driveway, stop right there. If you drive on in, you'll frighten them away. Instead, back out and head for the nearest phone and call the police. The burglars may think you were just a car turning in the driveway and continue their depredations.

New York, or the Faubourg St. Honoré in Paris. Here, small, highly personalized shops offer remarkably high-quality merchandise of every type. In this area I found the most charming jewelry shop run by the goldsmith and silversmith, Paul Binder, who is craftsman, salesman, designer, window-display director. In fact, it was the exquisite perfection of his tiny window display, comparable to Tiffany's best, that took us in. We found the most interestingly designed jewelry I have seen for many years. But he also had a most impressive collection of unset gems that showed unusual connoisseurship. I am a "rock hound" myself, and have shopped stones from Bangkok to Zanzibar, so have a pretty broad frame of reference. And Mr. Binder's collection was truly impressive. Address: Strehlgasse 8.

If you are thinking of making a major fur purchase you could pay for your trip to Zurich with the money you would save. Round-trip economy is around $380 and first class around $792, depending on the time of the year and the time of the week you go. For I estimate that fine furs are about 40-percent cheaper in Zurich than in America. And they are better worked than in other capitals of the world. One shop where the quality and prices were very impressive was Vigano, Bahnhofstrasse 40. There were several others of equal rank in the Old Town, and the styling was excellent.

The almost uniformly high styling was a surprise to me. One hears about the stodgy conservatism of the Swiss people. Somehow this did not show up in their stores. I saw no wild avant-garde styling, which is so dominant in other European cities. Zurich would not be a town to buy home furnishings, except possibly cutlery. But in all other categories of personal needs it offers bonanzas in taste and price.

Apparently everybody but Americans knows this. I have learned of one diplomatic family stationed in Istanbul who do all their shopping in Zurich on their way home to Paris on holiday. Why they do is perfectly clear to me. Another international traveler with years of experience explains that Zurich has such richness and variety because they have long had an international clientele. She pointed out that the Swiss are marvelously meticulous workmen, as can be witnessed by their big industries in watches, binoculars, cameras, and other precision instruments. She felt that they are marvelous adapters and copyists, rather than creators.

This opinion isn't altogether fair, because their watch styling is both creative and superb. Watch-shopping in Switzerland was a pleasant surprise, for I found three times as many styles as one finds imported to the U.S. Sadder to relate, our importers also pick the fussiest, dowdiest models for our consumption. The plethora of well-designed watches was impressive.

In fabric styling I was again impressed. In fact, the reason I had gone to Zurich after the ski country was to get a first-hand look at Swiss fabrics, which have enjoyed a certain status with American apparel, curtain, and table-linen manufacturers. I was indeed rewarded—even staggered—by what I found. It was the most rewarding yard-goods town in the world, surpassing Bangkok, Hong Kong, and Kyoto.

For delicious confections in yard goods, head for a chic specialty shop called Grieder, on the Bahnhofstrasse. It resembles Bonwit Teller or Saks Fifth Avenue, except that two whole floors are devoted to yard goods. And what yard goods! Each was a really technical tour de force, beyond my grasp to understand how it could have been achieved. If money were no object, the ideal way to procure your clothes would be to buy the fabrics in Zurich and then go on to Hong Kong to have them made up.

One of the nice things about shopping in Zurich is that these good shops are compactly grouped in a not too big area, so you don't need a long list of addresses. You can't miss them, since they are cheek by jowl with each other.

If you are the type that worries about paying duty, let me remind you that if you have bought what you want at prices that are 40- to 50-percent below what you would have paid at home, you can still be ahead by paying 15- to 30-percent duty. You will be enough ahead so that your airline fare will cost nothing. Of course, if you have only bought one watch, this does not apply. But if you make major purchases in several categories, it certainly does work.

There's through, no-change jet service to Zurich from New York on TWA, with a stop in Paris. Flying time is about eight and a half hours. ■

Water flows into reel's coupling, then through the reel itself and on through the garden hose; among other advantages, you need only unreel whatever length of garden hose you may require. Auxiliary cart moves the reel from faucet to faucet; or with reel detached, furnishes a utility dolly. Ames Handi-Truk Hose Reel costs $15.95 (minus garden hose); very sturdy, precision-made on every score. O. Ames Co., Parkersburg, W.Va.

For the first time, rechargeable "C" or "D" battery cells are available to replace usual ones. Recharger for the nickel-cadmium cells is engineered to prevent overcharge, also has light that glows when battery is charging. Cells themselves are leakproof, carry 5-year guarantee; overnight charging in household outlet restores to peak power. Gulton charger, $5.98; "D" cell, $5.98 a pair, "C", $4.98. Bloomingdale's, N.Y. 22.

Cleaner and wax are applied together by Armstrong's revolutionary touch-up pad for removing scuffs or heel marks. It contains tiny beads that capsule combined cleaner and wax; finger pressure crushes the beads, saturates pad's underside; topside remains dry; buffing tongue polishes the cleaned area to a shine. It takes only a few seconds; works like a charm. Box of 12 pads, 59¢. From Armstrong Cork Co., Lancaster, Pa.

Here's a new convenience for vinyl cleaning. Just spray on and wipe off; it removes any normal soil; left on briefly it dissolves even embedded grime; no rinsing is needed. It also removes stains, even stubborn types like lipstick, grease, etc. Effective and safe on any vinyl fabric or leather, vinyl floor or wall tile, upholstery. Non-flammable. Vinyl-Gleem costs $1.69 (14 ounces). Miles Kimball, 33 Algoma Blvd., Oshkosh, Wisconsin.

- Stenotype is a machine shorthand that uses only 22 symbols. It is not a pen-and-pencil system that forces you to memorize thousands of hooks, circles and special signs.
- Stenotype types an entire word at one stroke. Ordinary hand-written systems may require many strokes for a single word.
- Stenotype "takes" in plain English. This provides employers with a permanent, easily-transcribable record that is simple for any Stenotypist to refer to at any time in the future.
- Stenotype has no speed limit but the experience of its operator. Trained Stenotypists attain speeds of more than 200 words per minute. Complicated push-pencil systems can't compete.
- Stenotype is a small, compact, portable machine that is easy to take to courtrooms, conventions, or outside conferences at offices other than your own. This use of Stenotype — in a variety of unusual situations — is just another advantage the skilled Stenotypist has over ordinary shorthand secretaries.

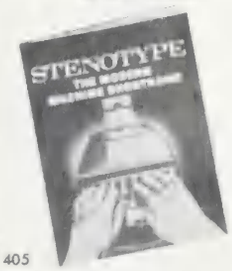
TODAY in thousands of executive offices, courtrooms, and convention halls, Stenotype is the synonym for highest speed and accuracy in the taking of notes, letters, speeches, testimony, interviews and debates.

With Stenotype, the modern machine shorthand, you can step up from routine office work into an exciting career where the pay is far above the average. You can qualify as executive secretary, legal stenographer, conference secretary, or one of many other high-level secretarial positions.



Stenotype machine notes are easier to take—easier to read — easier to transcribe than written notes. You never have "cold" notes, for you "take" in plain English letters that you can readily read back. Even if you've had difficulty mastering ordinary shorthand, you can become proficient in Stenotype in a short time. Then you won't be doing ordinary work — your services will always be in demand where the unusual secretary is needed.

You can learn Stenotype at home, without interference with your present job. The Stenotype machine itself is included in your course.

A summertime of Nature's Freshness (cool, quiet, and garden crisp)

Only LENNOX brings you Nature's Freshness. LENNOX works many wonders with a single, silent system. ■ The magic of cool, spring-fresh air, with summer's noise vanished. Cool, glass-filtered spring-fresh air, with summer's dirt locked out. Crisp and dry-as-autumn air (LENNOX wrings out summer's wetness). Gently flowing (no drafts, no blasts, no rush, no roar). ■ Your nights are cradled in quiet silence. Your days freshened with silent coolness. Nature's Freshness! Yours year-long with LENNOX, in your home today, in your home tomorrow. ■ 5,000 LENNOX dealers coast to coast. See your Yellow Pages. Or, write for today's "freshest story" on air conditioning and heating. ■ Address: LENNOX Industries Inc., 202 South 12th Avenue, Marshalltown, Iowa.

you want your chairs at an angle, why shouldn't your table fit in?

It should. And it can. Lane makes tables that fit into angles blend with any end

make a study corner

work with a chair and a sofa

give you a storage drum

keep up with an 8-foot sofa

add an extra drawer

ıt doors in a commode

line up for snacks

and round off 2 chairs.

Lane makes 21 Rhythm tables in all different sizes and shapes, for your sofas and chairs.

With 34 dressers, beds, chests, nightstands, buffets, dining tables, chairs and even a Sweetheart Chest to match.

All with tops beautifully veneered in mellow walnut. Many tables with imported marble tops, if you like.

The legs can't wobble, the tops can't rock, the drawers can't stick, the insides are finished like the outsides, the buffets have silver trays. There's no skimping anywhere.

Expensive? Not when you can get almost 5 feet of cocktail table for just $39.95.* For 64 page catalogue showing more than 300 Lane tables send $1 to The Lane Company, Dept. HB-26, Altavista, Virginia. In Canada, Kroehler Furniture Ltd., Hanover, Ontario.

Dishwasher giving you spots? Look!

WATER DROPS—See what happens when even clean water is sprayed on dishes. Drops like these dry into ugly spots and streaks.

CASCADE—Because of Cascade's "sheeting action," drops don't form. Cascade with Chlorosheen does it—and only Cascade has Chlorosheen!

Cascade's amazing "sheeting action" eliminates drops that spot!

Nothing beats Cascade at getting dishes clean. Cascade's remarkable "sheeting action" even eliminates the drops that cause ugly spots. Water ripples right off in clear-rinsing sheets. Dishes, glassware and silver come from your dishwasher as spotless and sparkling as possible, all ready for the fanciest table without the need for towel touch-ups.

And Cascade is rated safe for china patterns. America's leading makers of beautiful china—through the American Fine China Guild—have verified Cascade's unsurpassed safety to delicate patterns.

What's more, every leading dishwasher manufacturer recommends Cascade. So do women everywhere. They've made it America's favorite dishwasher detergent by far!

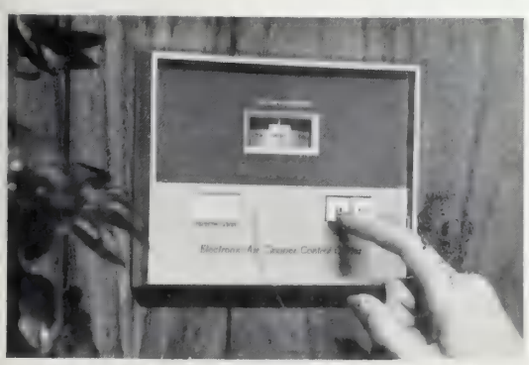
New Honeywell Electronic Air Cleaner removes up to 95% of airborne dust and pollen

Out comes clean air to fill your home . . . to help free your wife from daily dusting and cut your cleaning bills. The Honeywell "whole-house" Electronic Air Cleaner fits in the return air duct of any forced air heating—cooling system, removing up to 95%* of the pollen and other particles passing through it.

Air in your home contains millions of impurities. You only see the larger particles of dust that settle on table tops and shelves. It's a time-consuming . . . sometimes even a daily dusting job to get rid of them. But that's only half the story. The smaller invisible particles—over 90% of the total—the pollen, soot, smoke, cooking grease, bacteria and industrial wastes do most of the real damage.

They may cause discomfort, soil furniture and draperies, put a dingy haze on windows and mirrors, and leave white areas or "ghosts" lurking behind pictures. The Honeywell Electronic Air Cleaner is highly efficient when it comes to catching these smaller particles—the ones that can pass right through ordinary filters.

You'll notice the difference! Your family will enjoy the comfort of purer air. Mirrors, windows, walls and furnishings will stay and look cleaner. You'll save money on cleaning bills. Of course, your wife won't throw away her dust cloth—no air cleaner can remove particles that settle before they enter the system. But her dusting time will be reduced. And the money you save can pay for your air cleaner.



Get the benefits of the same filtering system used extensively in hospitals. On a 3-year FHA loan, it can cost as little as $14.38 a month, installed in your present home. In a new home it may be included in the mortgage for under $2.00 per month.

If you don't have a forced air system or are renting a home, the Honeywell Portable Electronic Air Cleaner could be your answer. Ideal for your office—or conference room, too.

Do yourself and your wife a favor. Just mail the coupon for information on Honeywell's whole-house or room-portable Electronic Air Cleaners.

*As measured by the National Bureau of Standards Dust Spot Method.

Honeywell

Handsome and Handy, this wall-mounted Control Center in the living area shows you when your air cleaner is working at peak efficiency, and when it needs washing.

Only 7 inches deep, the cleaner is easy to install in the return-air duct work of any forced air heating or cooling system. It takes no more current than a 40 watt bulb.

HORIZON at a new low price

From the Reign of Terror to Waterloo, one little man bestrode most of Europe. Even today his mark endures. Law, history, morality, art, literature – all bear the imprint of his personality. J. Christopher Herold re-creates this spectacular man, and the era which bears his name. In Herold's swiftly moving narrative, Napoleon's illustrious contemporaries come to life: Wellington, Nelson, Czar Alexander, Talleyrand, Josephine, Jefferson, Madame de Staël. 453 pages (with 16 pages of illustration). Published at $7.50. A recent Book-of-the-Month Club selection from HORIZON Books.

Ever see HORIZON? You must, to believe it.

It's a singular magazine. Just to riffle through it delights your eye. Beautiful. To read an article or two is to engage your mind. Thought-provoking. To go through an issue from cover to cover is to kindle your imagination. Soul-satisfying.

We can offer you a trial subscription here at a remarkably good price. And to make the bargain even more appealing, we'll also send you – free – a HORIZON history that was a Book-of-the-Month Club selection.

What's HORIZON Like?

As magazines generally go, HORIZON doesn't. Even at first glance, it's different. It comes in a box. Handsome, hard covers. Contains not one advertisement. Never goes out of date.

It is a quarterly, produced by American Heritage Publishing Co., Inc. In its generous size (9¼" by 12¼"), in the fine papers and color printing of its 120 or so pages, HORIZON resembles the handsomest art books. But it is much more.

HORIZON invites your interest in the ideas and philosophies of man; in his history – from caves to castles, in his plays and conceits, in his rare flames of genius, a figure, a canvas, an insight, a book. . . .

Who's It For?

For you, if you like variety without superficiality, scholarship without tedium, art without affectation. It's for all who know that a liberal education doesn't stop on Commencement Day. As one reader put it, "HORIZON says what civilization is." With style, wit, and perception.

What's In It?

Take the Summer 1964 issue. Its features range from Cleveland Amory's sweet profile of that great trencherman, Diamond Jim Brady, to Edmund Stillman's reflective walk through the streets of Sarajevo fifty years after Franz Ferdinand's assassination (a seven-page picture portfolio accompanies Stillman's article).

In between, a distinguished English visitor, Mervyn Jones, tastes Red China's sweet-and-sour blend of Marxism, modern science, and ancient tradition. J. Christopher Herold explores the brilliant, neurotic, prophetic mind of Jean Jacques Rousseau. C. V. Wedgwood vividly recounts the execution of King Charles I.

Compton Mackenzie takes a personal and partisan view of Charles Dickens. It's the latest in HORIZON's series on great English novelists; we predict you'll react strongly to it one way or another. And there's a lively and well-documented attack on the city-choking cult of the automobile by Victor Gruen.

As in every HORIZON, there's much to see. John Canaday's documentation of the genius of Albrecht Dürer is accompanied by 22 Dürer reproductions, many in color. There's a 21-page adventure in pre-Columbian archaeology, richly illustrated with treasures from the lost civilizations of Central and South America. All in all, there are 100 or so illustrations.

What's More –

– there's even a hidden bonus: as a subscriber you may purchase later, if you wish, each new HORIZON book at a gratifying saving before it is offered to the public. In the past, important works on art, archaeology, and history have been offered to readers at savings of 25% or more.

How Much?

HORIZON's regular price is $3 a copy, or $12 by the year. But just now, you may try a year of HORIZON for the lowest price in its five year history: $12.95 for four quarterly issues. And you will receive free, with your subscription, the $7.50 "Age of Napoleon."

HORIZON's Summer issue is printed [illegible]. To make sure you start with this issue, and often better mail the postpaid order form [illegible] between these pages. If the form is gone, send the lower portion of this page, with your name and address, to HORIZON Subscription Office, 379 West Center Street, Marion, Ohio 43301.

Yes, even dried-egg spots

At last! A dishwasher detergent that really does both! (1) cleans difficult food stains (2) ends water spots

You need a dishwasher detergent that does more than stop water spots. Now it's here!

No matter what the stain—dried-in grease, sticky chocolate, gooey syrup, filmed-in milk, smudged lipstick, stubborn tea stains—even dried-up egg spots—now you can have glasses, silver, dishes, pots that are cleaner, brighter than any other dishwasher detergent can make them—and without water spotting.

Electrasol's even-flow formula cleans without clinging. This is due to an extraordinary wetting agent that makes water "wetter" so it cleans even the most difficult stains—then rolls right off your dishes. Will not spot, film or streak...no matter how hard the water...or what make your dishwasher. No wonder Electrasol is recommended by every leading dishwasher manufacturer.

Revive the icy shrub

the drink that guests will pour for themselves

Guests at your party will sip appreciatively the versatile 19th-century shrub. It's the only drink that can also double as a dessert.

By EPSIE KINARD

▪ William Thackeray called the shrub the best drink that ever was. We can top that. This long, cool drink of sweetened fruit juices laced with spirits is also the best drink there ever was to prepare in advance for a party. Mixed in quantities in advance and kept chilled in the refrigerator, it frees you from having to service individual drink orders. Of course there's no law that says that you have to wait for a party to drink a shrub or to mix one on the spur of the moment, when a peak-of-the-season fruit tempts you to turn on the blender.

Shrubs should be served in a pitcher, a carafe, or a giant brandy inhaler. Clear, uncolored glass makes the perfect window for viewing the rich color of strawberry, grape, blueberry, plum, or other fruit juice. Drink it from highball or Pilsener glasses. Bring it to your guests surrounded by crushed ice. Also, chill the bottles of carbonated water or champagne which are added to the individual glasses. You may want stirring spoons or straws.

There is a definite revival of interest in this versatile 19th-century drink. But it's made so much more easily now than it was then. Native fruits and those flown here from all over the world are naturals for our simplified food mills, electrical juicers, and blenders. Our blenders turn out shrubs that are better and easier to make than the West Indian planters (who invented them) ever dreamed of drinking.

The sweetened juice of almost any fruit—fresh, frozen, or canned—is the basis of a shrub. Besides the fruits included in our recipes below, you may use blackberry, quince, loganberry, passion fruit, papaya, nectarine, apricot—if they are in a state of peak perfection.

Once you get the hang of the shrub formula, you can experiment endlessly, combining whatever ingredients you have on hand.

Lace your fruit juice with liquor—bourbon, rum, vodka, or gin—or with brandy or champagne. To give a shrub more finesse, use a complementary fruit liqueur to intensify its fruit flavor. A Cherry Shrub, for instance, is enriched when paired with a cherry liqueur or a Strawberry Shrub when paired with Crème de Fraises.

Leave the spirits out of the shrub, and you have the makings of a sorbet, an icy fruit slush that's a real dessert winner. To freeze fruit juices for making a sorbet, use ice-cube trays from which grids are removed. Stir a few times so crystals do not set up. Serve it when it reaches semiliquid.

The only things a shrub has that a sorbet hasn't are carbonated water and liquors, which won't freeze. (See shrub recipes below, all of which can be turned into sorbets.) Garnish a sorbet after it's dished up into sherbet or parfait glasses. Serve with a spoon for eating and a straw for sipping when the sorbet liquefies, which it does fast on a hot day.

Whichever use you make of the fruit juices, you have a choice of sweeteners. Traditional is a simple syrup. Boiling two pounds of

PHOTOGRAPHED AT THE LODGE AT VAIL, COLORADO'S NEW POWDER SNOW PARADISE

Barwick has a soft spot for skiers...

The ski set never had it so soft . . . not until Gene Barwick put plush, plump Barwick carpet on the slope. Social-climbing snow bunnies discovered a bright new dimension in skiing. And when the day is done, what could be softer than rich, thick Barwick carpet to fall back on! Expensive? Not so. A man's fine linen handkerchief* usually costs more per square yard than most fine Barwick carpets. Softest touch a slope (or floor) ever had!

Barwick fashions ACRILAN ACRYLIC — NYLON — HERCULON OLEFIN (the longest wearing fibers known) into luxurious carpet pile of radiant, enduring colors. From $7.95 to $24.95 per square yard.

*Four make a square yard.
4 x $2.50 = $10.00

sugar in 2½ cups of water for five or six minutes makes a quart. Cool, bottle, and store in refrigerator. It keeps for weeks.

You can also use fruit jellies of compatible fruit flavors as sweeteners. Whiz the jelly in the blender with other shrub ingredients for perfect infusion. Bottled fruit syrups will do the same thing as jellies for a shrub—make a more opulent drink. Naturally you'd reduce the quantity of syrup.

Another sweetener is the syrupy fruit juice drained from the frozen or canned fruits you use. Some liqueurs you use may add all the sweetening you'll need. The ripeness of the fruit will affect the quantity of sweetener needed.

For a garnish, use mint sprigs, pineapple sticks, unstemmed cherries, peeled grapes, or spirals of lime peel.

General Directions

- Semi-thaw any frozen fruits or juices used before putting into blender, juicer, or Foley Food Mill.
- Prechill serving containers and as many of the ingredients as possible.
- Champagne or carbonated water is always added the last minute to the drinker's glass and usually by him to suit his taste.
- Strain all juices to remove all solid fiber or skins. The aim is to have one-hundred-percent liquid.
- Bring the large serving container to your guests buried in crushed ice.

Recipes

Where carbonated water or champagne is used in the following recipes, add it to the individual glass just before drinking.

Hawaiian Shrub

1 fresh pineapple, peeled and cut into small chunks
(or three 6-oz. cans of frozen undiluted pineapple-orange juice; or three 12½-oz. packages frozen pineapple chunks)
1 cup fresh orange juice (omit if frozen pineapple-orange juice is used)
Juice from 2 lemons
1 cup simple syrup
Dash of vanilla
½ cup of Kirsch
½ cup Cointreau
16 oz. light rum or 1 bottle champagne

Put fresh or frozen pineapple chunks through a blender, a food mill, or juicer. (If you use a blender, strain the resulting purée, pressing pulp through sieve with rubber spatula to remove all bits of fiber.) Add other fruit juices, syrup, vanilla, liqueurs, and rum. Blend well and pour into large container and refrigerate till needed. You may substitute champagne for rum and soda, but as with all bubblies, add at the last minute to the drinkers' glasses. Serves a party of 16-18.

Raspberry Shrub

3 cups fresh raspberries (or two 10-oz. packages frozen raspberries)
1 cup raspberry jelly or simple syrup
1 cup Creme de Framboises (raspberry liqueur)
Juice of 3 lemons
12 oz. Cognac

Remove stems from fresh berries (the frozen are stemless), and put through a food mill, juicer, or blender with the jelly. If blender is used, strain. Add other ingredients, and blend well. Pour into large container and refrigerate till needed. Serves 10-12.

Plum Shrub

3 cups fresh fully ripe purple plums (peeled and pitted)
1 cup purple plum jelly, plum preserves, or simple syrup
Juice of 2 lemons
12 oz. plum brandy, quetsch (90-proof), or slivovitz (100-proof)

Put plums, sweetener and lemon juice through blender or juicer, strain, and add plum brandy. Blend well. Pour into large container, and refrigerate till needed. Serves 10-12.

Peach Shrub

2 cups sliced, peeled fresh peaches or one 12-oz. pkg. frozen peaches
1 cup simple syrup or peach syrup (Omit if frozen peaches have own syrup)
Juice of 1 lemon or 2 limes
½ cup peach brandy or liqueur
½ cup Southern Comfort
½ pt. good bonded bourbon

Put peach slices into blender or juicer. If blender is used, strain. Add syrup, lemon or lime juice, liqueurs, and bourbon. Blend well, pour mixture into large container, and refrigerate until needed. Serves 8-10.

Blueberry Shrub

2 cups fresh blueberries or one 12-oz. package frozen blueberries in syrup
Juice of 2 lemons
½ cup simple syrup
½ cup Creme de Cassis
½ bottle champagne

Whiz berries in blender or

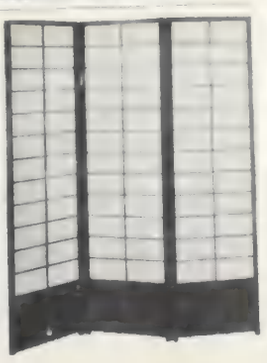
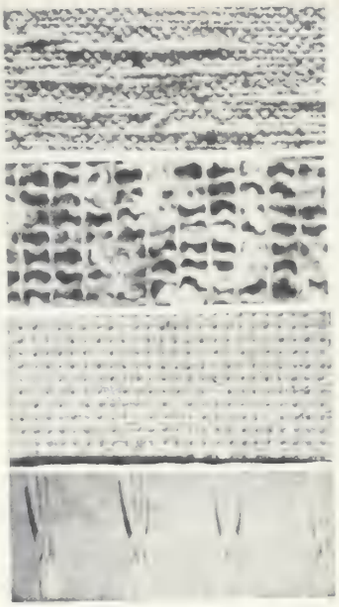
WE DINED with our favorite hostess last week. The table was laid with an exquisite Madeira cloth. The centerpiece was a glorious arrangement of flowers from her garden. And golden sea shells, like these, held the place cards. The effect was elegant and charming. Any bride would love them for her first dinner party. Set of 4, $1.25; 8, $1.98. Vernon, HB8, 30 Evans St., New Rochelle, N.Y.

PARING OF THE GREEN. Pick a sprig of fresh parsley. Run the parsley cutter down the stalk to chop it up quickly, easily. Add it to a beef stew and you've "made" a ragout! It's the piquant touch that makes the difference between cuisine and plain-Jane cooking. French import, steel blades, rosewood handle. 7½" long, $1.50. Edith Chapman, Route 303, Blauvelt, New York.

LOOP EARRINGS. Feminine wile and style make these accessories charmers for a seductive black sheath or an important-fabric shift. Order them in dime or quarter sizes in sterling silver or 18k gold plate, $2.50 a pair. In copper (nice with a golden tan), $1.50 a pair. Add 25¢ for post. From Vicki, 610-BL So. Country Club Road, Tucson, Arizona.



ORIENTAL SHOJI SCREENS



Now, enliven your home with this Hinoki pattern—the authentic, accepted screen of Japan. The simplicity of design is a major reason for this screen's popularity. Although the screen is ruggedly constructed, it still maintains its delicate, sensitive, gracious lines. Projects a light, airy mood which brightens any interior. Hand made by Japanese craftsmen whose high quality and unique workmanship cannot be imitated, this pattern can be used as a room divider, folding screen, sliding door, etc. Each panel is 24" x 7 ft. high and includes fiberglas sheeting. Available in black lacquer or natural cypress hardwood. Specially priced, both sides are finished so that either side can be utilized.

Marg Pond says:

...anything can be made beautiful with decorative art!

You can learn to paint for PLEASURE or PROFIT

You can enjoy the thrill of turning trinkets into treasures or discards into glamorous gifts. No special skills are needed. If you can thread a needle you can learn the patterns, short cuts, and techniques used by expert gift decorators. Marg Pond learned the secret 20 years ago, and taught her friends, then classes. Now thousands are learning at home. Some do it for pleasure, but most because there's a ready, profitable market for their gifts at stores, antique shops, bazaars. In a few lessons at home you can learn to paint roses in just eight, beautifully shaded triple-tone strokes. Flowers and fruit come alive under your brush. 6′ OF DEACON'S BENCH can seat three with room to spare at a family-room harvest table. The seat, hand-scooped from 2" pine, is 15" deep; back and legs are hardwood. 32" high overall, 72" long. Assembled and ready to paint or finish, $44.95. In antique maple, light or dark pine finish, $54.95. Exp. chgs. coll. Order from Templeton Craftsmen, HB8, Templeton, Massachusetts.

INN GROUP. Washington's men quaffed their ale, you may be sure, in a tavern that displayed one of these quaint signs now adapted as napkin holders in black wrought iron. Fun bits of folk-lore for a country kitchen, a breakfast nook, a bar, have a verse on each, are decorated in bright colors. 4½x5", $1.98 each; 2 for $3.75. Medford Products, HB8, 752 Fulton St., Farmingdale, L.I., N.Y.

IF DIET DOESN'T DO IT, you can exercise away those bulges on this Salon Cycler. Fifteen minutes pedaling every day will tone up flabby muscles, strengthen and trim legs, ankles, thighs, stomach, waist, help improve posture. Sturdy chrome-plated steel construction, adjustable seat. $9.95 plus $1 post. Scott-Mitchell House, HB8, 415 South Broadway, Yonkers, New York.

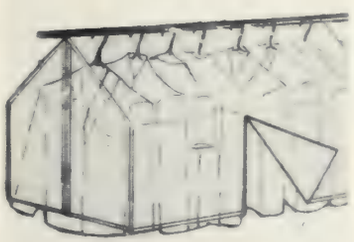
GETTING THE RUSH of rain water detoured before the daisies drown is the rain sprinkler's job. 8′ of plastic that defies wind and wear attaches to a round or rectangular spout. When the heavens open up, it unrolls, automatically sprinkling your lawn. No more ruts, gutters or gullies! 88¢. 3, $2.50. Order from Spencer Gifts, 622 Spencer Bldg., Atlantic City, New Jersey.

A CARVING KNIFE bred on the cutting board of a master butcher came to its prime in his skilled hands. Created for commercial use, knives have been honed hundreds of times to produce the razor-like edge, and a sabre-like slimness. Heavy-duty 11" carbon steel blade, wood handle, no two alike! $3.95. Max Major, Dealer in Unique Knives, Walden, N.Y.

ROLLING IN DOUGH. Here's an investment in fun for an adult or a half-pint tycoon. Drop a coin, watch it roll, sort itself into the correct channel, and mark the amount saved. Coins travel roller-coaster route to safekeeping in this crystal clear plastic and chromed steel bank. 6½" square, with lock & key. $1.98. Greenland Studios, HB8, Miami, Florida 33147.

ICE CREAM CHAIR for sipping a coke by the pool or playing gin in the sun is our particular summer love. Handcrafted wrought iron with white, beige, avocado, orange, red, dark blue, black or toast leatherette seat. $13.50 each. (Min. order, 2.) 2 chairs & 30" white table with stain and heat-resistant laminated top, $50. Exp. coll. Dinette World Assoc., HB8, 1 No. Central Ave., Hartsdale, N.Y.

DOGS DREAM. cats nap and fleas flee on this sling bed. Black wrought-iron frame holds vat-dyed washable canvas sling that comes in black, green, or red; packs flat for travel. 18x18", $6.95; 27x21", $8.95; both ppd. 36x25", $12.95 exp. coll. Extra slings available for each size at $1.95, $2.95, $5.95. From The Hitching Post, HB, Box 377, Syosset, New York 11791.



THE PLOT THICKENS. Is it a desk, an arm rest, file, a ready map holder? It's all three—a novel car desk and carry-all that fits any car, folds flat for storing. Perfect for playwrites on the road, salesmen. 12x21½" walnut-finished desk with tartan plaid (red, or blue and green), chrome-plated legs, magnetic pencil, clip. $9.85. Bri-Son, HB, 12260 Ventura, Studio City, Cal.

POST POSITION is the obvious answer for this miniature jaunty jockey in his colorful "silks." And, as he's hand-decorated cast iron, he does wear well. We could make a bundle betting that a turf-lover would find him an amusing desk ornament who doubles as a paper weight. 3½" high, $2 each; $3.75 a pair. Seth & Jed, HB8, New Marlborough, Mass.

CLOSET COVER. Why bother with individual covers for the frocks, suits, coats that hang in your closet when you can keep them dust-free, ready for daily use with just one giant cover? It's made of heavy-weight "see through" vinyl with easy-access, hinge-action sides, 36" long, $1. Bancroft's, Dept. 44-268, 251 East 5th St., St. Paul 1, Minnesota.

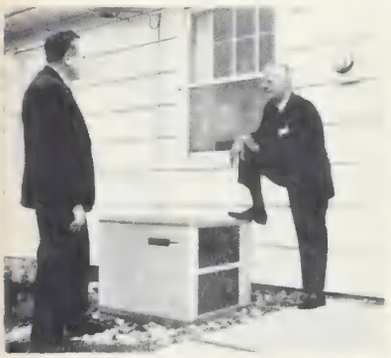
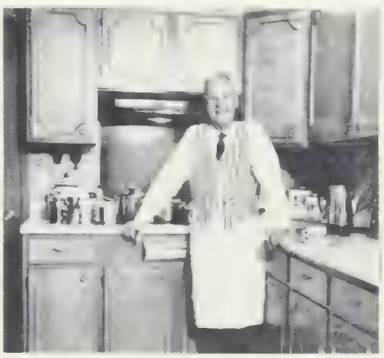
"We air conditioned our 7-room home for just $975"

Mr. & Mrs. M. L. Humphreys of Kansas City, Kansas, were pleasantly surprised by the reasonable cost of enjoying General Electric Central Air Conditioning.



"Our home has 1,832 square feet of living area," Mr. Humphreys observes, "and the two-ton unit we had in the living room before didn't begin to cool the rest of the house. But since we installed our General Electric central system, every room stays at the same even temperature. And that means a lot—especially when it comes to sleeping in hot weather. We wouldn't be without it."



"I have sinus trouble," Mrs. Humphreys remarks, "and I was afraid central air conditioning would make it worse. Actually, central air conditioning has relieved it. My head stays clear as a bell. It's wonderful!"

"We love to entertain," Mrs. Humphreys continues, "but when the temperature got to be over 100° and the humidity high, it used to be almost impossible. Now, we have our friends in all summer long."

"I looked at all makes," says Mr. Humphreys, standing beside his G-E central unit, "and we decided to go with G.E., because they're reliable. Installation took just two days. We haven't had one service call since."

"I like to char-broil," adds amateur chef Humphreys, "and now, we can cook out during the summers, then eat in where it's cool. Of course, air conditioning has added a great deal to the value of our property, too."

If you have forced-air heat—as the Humphreys do—you, too, can enjoy General Electric Central Air Conditioning at a very modest price. Call your G-E dealer for a free survey and installation estimate. Ask him, too, about his easy financing terms. You'll find him listed in the Yellow Pages under "Air Conditioning Equipment."

Stem and pit, if using fresh cherries, and put through blender or juicer. Strain. Add lemon juice, syrup, and liqueurs, and blend well. Pour into large serving container, and refrigerate till needed. Serves 10-12.

Grape-Tangerine Shrub

1 cup fully ripe red (Tokay) or black (Ribier) grapes, skinned and seeded
1 cup tangerine juice (two 6-oz. cans frozen undiluted tangerine juice or two 8-oz. cans mandarin orange sections)
1 cup simple syrup
1 cup Van der Hum or mandarin liqueur
Juice of one lemon or two limes
½ pt. light rum

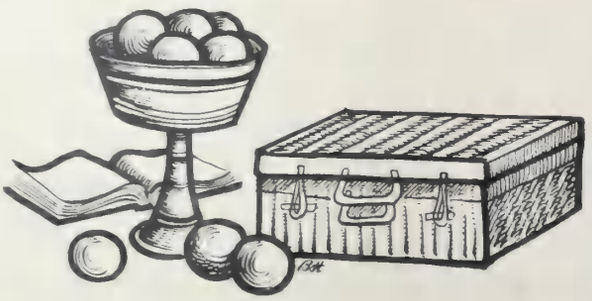
Put grapes through blender or juicer. If mandarin orange sections are used, put these through machine also. Strain out pulp. Add remaining ingredients to the strained juices, and blend well. Pour into large container, and refrigerate. Serves 6-8.

Mixed Fruit Shrub

1 cup fully-ripe red (Tokay) or black (Ribier) grapes, skinned and seeded
1 cup fresh pineapple chunks (or one 12½ oz. package frozen pineapple chunks)
1 cup peeled, sliced fresh ripe peaches
Juice of one lemon
Juice of one orange
1 cup simple syrup
½ cup Kirsch
12 oz. vodka or light rum

Put fruit and citrus juices into blender, juicer or the food mill. (If blender is used, strain.) Add syrup, spirits, and blend well. Pour into large container, and refrigerate. Serves 10-12.

Santa Shrub



2 cups fresh orange juice (or one 12-oz. can undiluted frozen orange juice) strained
Juice of one lemon or two limes, strained
1 cup simple syrup
1 cup Grand Marnier
½ cup Orange Flower Water
10 oz. vodka or light rum

Blend all ingredients together, pour into large container, and refrigerate. Serves 8-10.

Strawberry Shrub

2 cups fresh or 1-lb. package frozen whole strawberries
Juice of two lemons
½ cup simple syrup or strawberry syrup
1 cup Creme de Fraises (strawberry liqueur)
6 jiggers light rum or ½ bottle champagne

Put strawberries through blender or juicer, then strain. Add lemon juice, syrup, liqueur and rum. Blend well, pour into container and refrigerate. If champagne is used instead of rum, pour it into drinkers' glasses at the last minute. Serves 6-8. ■

In Vienna, see the world as it used to be

Of all Europe's great cities, Vienna is the last stronghold of a gracious, tradition-mannered past. A phenomenon in the modern world, it retains a personable atmosphere all its own

By MARION GOUGH

Vienna is a place where people still unabashedly love the baroque, the gleam of gold leaf, and the crystal chandelier. There are shops with carpeted floors and dark and cozy wood-paneled walls. Buildings have the lasting quality of stone carvings, garnished with cornices and pediments and all manner of nonfunctional ornament that has begun to look quaint to modern eyes.

And in this five-meal-a-day society, no one seems to suffer any up-to-date guilt feelings after a mid-morning snack of Wienerwurst and beer, or the afternoon solace of hot chocolate with whipped cream and a pastry. The town, in short, exudes a comfortable turn-of-the-century old-fashionedness, substantial as the aroma of a good cigar.

In actuality, Vienna has its full quota of the new-fangled, including an underground shopping center, tangled traffic, atomic research, modern housing developments, and a splendid new hotel. But essentially its pace and manner are nostalgic. It is what most travelers from the New World hope the Old World is going to be—and all too often find that it is not. It seems to have crystallized into its last well known belle époque, the reign of Franz Joseph. They were star-crossed times, to be sure, but they were also a romantic era, and Vienna's broad boulevards call up visions of imperial processions in plumed and flashing panoply. The tree-shaded Ringstrasse, circling the very heart of the old town, each arc of the "ring" differently titled, suggests elegant promenades en voiture, which you might duplicate to a degree if you take one of the city's Fiaker, or horse-drawn hackney cabs.

It is a green city, from the woods which literally surround the town to its 759 public parks and gardens—an impressive number for 1,600,000 inhabitants, who seem to insist that their public places be kept in fine flowery manicure. This reminds us that one of the city's greatest attractions this summer is the Viennese International Horticultural Exhibition, an ambitious 247-acre botanical fair which will include a revolving tower restaurant and a floating stage, and continuous displays of gardening technique and products, which will be shown through October 11.

One illusion you must not permit yourself, although years of song and legend may have misled you. The town is not populated with svelte blonde Merry Widows and lean and dashing cavalry officers. The Sachertorte and Strudel and cream-filled Indianer Krapfen appear to us to have taken—or rather, added—their toll, and the population seems not as light on their feet as we had expected to find them in a city as renowned for its waltzing as for its Wienerschnitzel. We are told, however, that come February and the eve of the annual opera ball in the Staatsoper, such brilliance and grace prevail that one never (Please turn to page 127)

These doors open into a house that shows how a well-designed building can provide the best climate control.

A sensible way to control climate

▪ To many people, climate control means shutting the windows and turning on the air conditioner. Then, if not comfortable, they assume that they need a newer and more powerful air conditioner. This assumption is only one part of a more general assumption prevalent today: The more recent a thing is, the better it is. This assumption has its counterpart—equally invalid: To achieve comfort in relation to climate, constructional means are not as good as the mechanical, since the latter are more recent.

On the basis of these assumptions, there has been a tendency to disregard constructional devices and use mechanical ones. Today, we inhabit buildings in which we are roasted—and refrigerated—simultaneously. (Please turn the page)

As seen from street, the significant features of the house are the structure elevating the living area and the roofs, shading and protecting it. Entrance marked by special doors.

For full advantage of the 180° view, a living-room balcony on the water side seemingly projects over water. Balcony and low-eaved roof keep sky and water glare out of interior.

HOUSE BEAUTIFUL'S CLIMATE
PROJECT

Dock space for several boats is provided at the sea wall. The loggia, adjacent to this and beneath the living room with its projected balcony, provides a second way by which guests arriving by boat can enter the house. Deeply shaded by the balcony and the house, it also serves as an outdoor living area.

A sensible way to control climate

By CURTIS BESINGER

The house shown here demonstrates that you need not rely on mechanical means to control the climate. Its owners live comfortably in an interior climate produced by good planning and construction, with the aid of little mechanical equipment. The air-conditioning system used when the wind stops blowing is a supplement to—not a substitute for—a sensible way of building in a hot climate.

This water-front house was designed by Architect Peter Jefferson. It is a year-round house, but its particular character stems, in part, from the owners' request for "an elegant beach house," one in which a person would feel at home whether in a swim suit or in more formal dress.

The house is in a tropical region. It is a region that has a high percentage of warm-humid days and in which hurricanes can, and do, occur. Because of this, many of the techniques that have developed in such a region—and in order to solve climatic problems—were used. And they were used because they are still the best known solution to the particular problems of this region. The living area is elevated above the ground (yet anchored to it) for protection against the high tides that often accompany tropical storms. The space beneath the house permits the wind and the storm waters to flow through unimpeded. The living area is well shaded and set deep within the shelter to protect it from sun and driving rains. The house was planned so that its longest dimension is perpendicular to the direction of the prevailing breezes. And its walls were opened in various ways to permit the breeze to blow through.

As can be seen by studying plans and photographs, the use of these somewhat traditional techniques has not only produced a favorable climatic environment, it has also produced other results that are equally important, but of a different kind. In any landscape that is flat (either land or water) being up in the air even a small distance counts for very much. You enjoy a visual vantage point. In

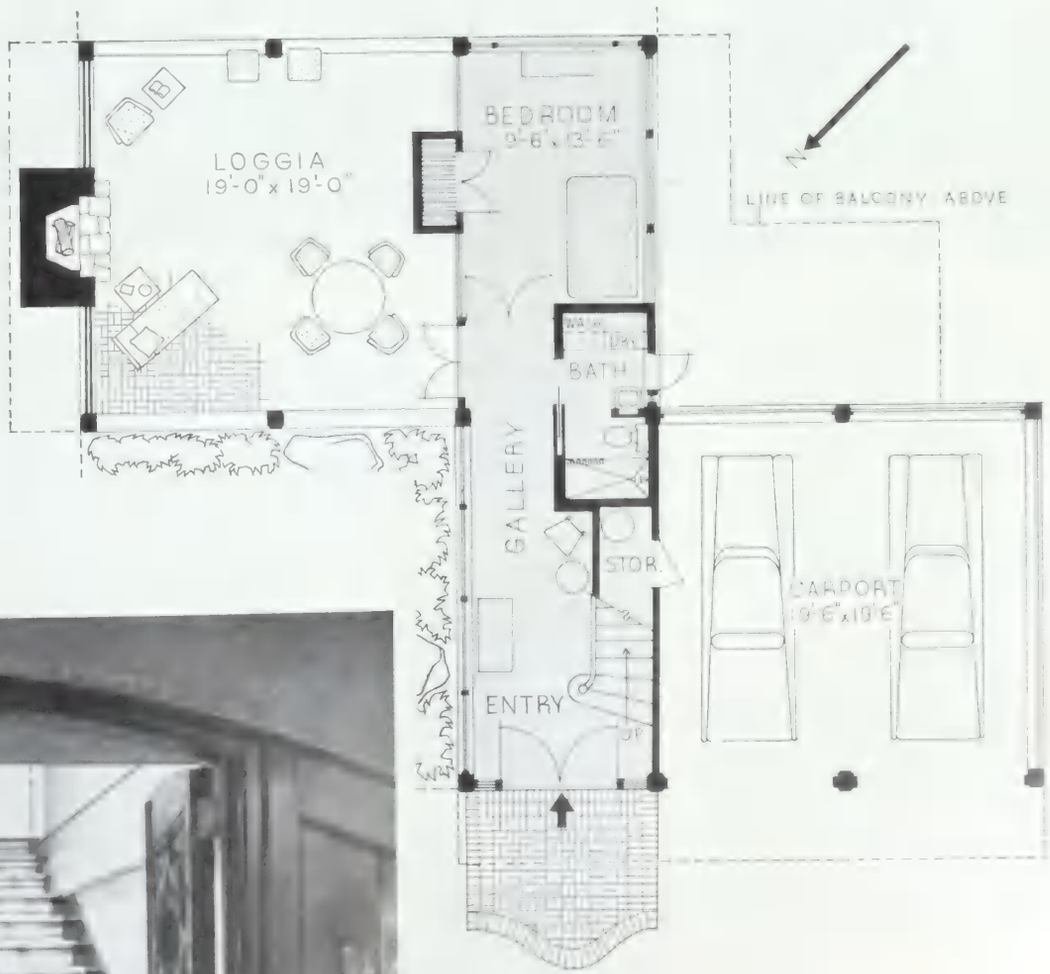
The street-side living-room balcony overlooks the entry drive. From it you can see people standing at the entrance. Also from here, you see through the open doors to tile-floored hall (at left of smaller bedroom) and into master bedroom beyond.

The loggia, with its deeply shaded, structurally defined openness, reflects the blow-through character that is prevalent in the house. The substructure of the house frames the view, and yet it makes the loggia feel like a room.



SECOND FLOOR PLAN

The house (planned in relation to a structural bay system that is most evident in the ground-floor plan) is essentially two pavilions. These were raised for protection against hurricanes and oriented to take advantage of the views toward the bay and of the breezes from it. In one of the pavilions are the living room and the dining and cooking facilities. In the other are the bedrooms and bathing and dressing facilities. The pavilions lap by one bay at the hall at the head of the stairs. To gain added space on the upper level, balconies and alcovelike areas of rooms project beyond the boundaries of the structural bays.

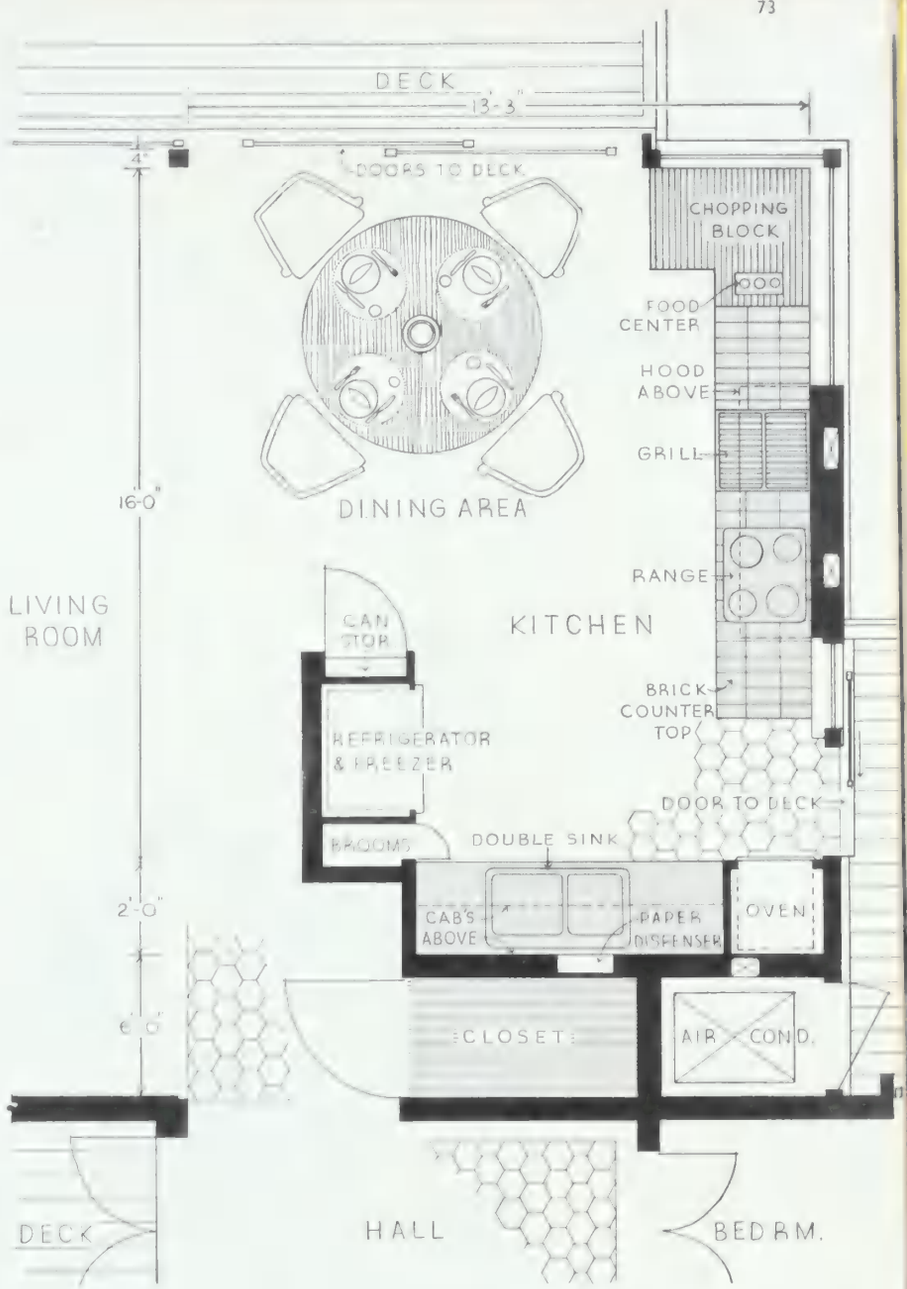
GROUND FLOOR PLAN

5 10 15 FT.

ARCHITECT:
Peter Jefferson

The entrance hall and the bedroom that can be seen through the arched opening at its end are the only enclosed spaces on the ground floor. Otherwise, this floor is completely open, so that the breezes (and the storms) may flow through.

The living room, with sliding doors to balconies at both sides, can be opened to let the breezes blow through. If the doors are shut, areas behind the louvered shutters over the doors can be opened for ventilation control.



A spacious, high-ceilinged room contains the major living areas of the house. Although not much in evidence, cooking activities are combined with dining. Wall, at photo's right, hides potential unsightliness.

this house the living-room balcony on the water side illustrates this. You seem projected out over the water and away from land. In contrast to this experience, the balcony of the master bedroom is intimate and secluded. Facing south and shielded by two walls of the house from cool winds, it offers a different kind of relationship to the water, one that is quieter and less demanding.

The strong roof, with its eaves made broad and low to keep out the sun and rain, is also a very effective means of shutting out sky glare. This glare, produced by reflection of light from the moisture in the air, is a source of radiant heat as well as eye discomfort. In this house you live, in effect, under a broad-brimmed hat. Here you do not need to wear sunglasses indoors. (This may sound like a strange statement, but it is frequently required in some glass-walled houses.) The occupants of this house can view the landscape through clear—not heavily tinted—glass.

Since the roof may appear to have an affected picturesqueness, perhaps other things should be said about it. The red cedar shakes that cover it provide a high degree of shielding against solar heat gain. The (Please turn the page)

An ingenious plan makes it possible to combine living, dining, and cooking activities within one large, open space. A part of the kitchen counter extends into the dining area as a kind of buffet for food service. It contains an electric cooking top as well as a charcoal grill. A large hood removes cooking odors.

Potentially unsightly cooking activities are concealed by a wall at the right of the dishwasher and sink. In this wall are a built-in refrigerator-freezer unit, a linen closet, and storage shelves used for canned goods.

many layers of wood and air in this roof provide good insulation. In addition, the high interior space increases the ratio between the heat that does penetrate, which is minimal, and that which does reach the occupants.

This house, its design directed toward capitalizing on the breeze, is outwardly open. It also has an inner openness. Although the low eaves of the roof contain the space of the house (they close it at the perimeter), this is offset by the height of the ceiling's peak—about 14 feet—which gives the interior a soaring spaciousness.

The plan furthers the spaciousness. For freedom of air movement, the interior was divided into the least number of rooms. Those needed for privacy are linked by wide halls and double doorways. These open the inner spaces to each other. In them the occupants can move freely—like a breeze. ■

Product information about this house appears on page 132

The dressing room of master bedroom has two lavatories built into counters at sides of dressing table. Shower and water closet compartments are at opposite sides of linen closet at room's end.

Carefully designed storage means ease of housekeeping

The dressing room seen on opposite page has a wall facing the street. In it, louvered shutters and sliding glass panels above shoulder-high cabinets provide privacy. They also further blow-through openness of house. The cabinets fitted with shoe racks, sliding trays, etc., are ventilated by louvered doors.

In the dressing room, a closet near doorway to master bedroom was carefully planned for storage of many kinds of clothing. The two-tier hanging space is for such things as blouses and skirts. Drawers at center are for foldables. At the side of hanging space for longer garments is a tier of shelves for plastic boxes for shoes, etc.

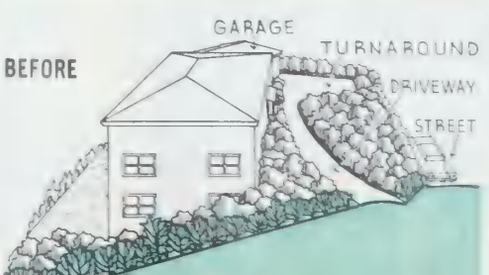
Above: Though the pool is only a few feet from the street, privacy is assured by the privet hedge, the stockadelike fence, and the fact that outdoor living is done on a lower level, below the line of sight. Right: At the far end, the terrace is about eight feet below the street level, with another six or seven feet of fence and hedge to protect it. Vine-covered trellis here provides shade when necessary. Far right: Pool is 15 feet wide at shallow end (foreground), widens to 22 feet at deep-water diving end. Circulating water is piped throughout the stone wall so it drips pleasantly from the overhanging boulders.



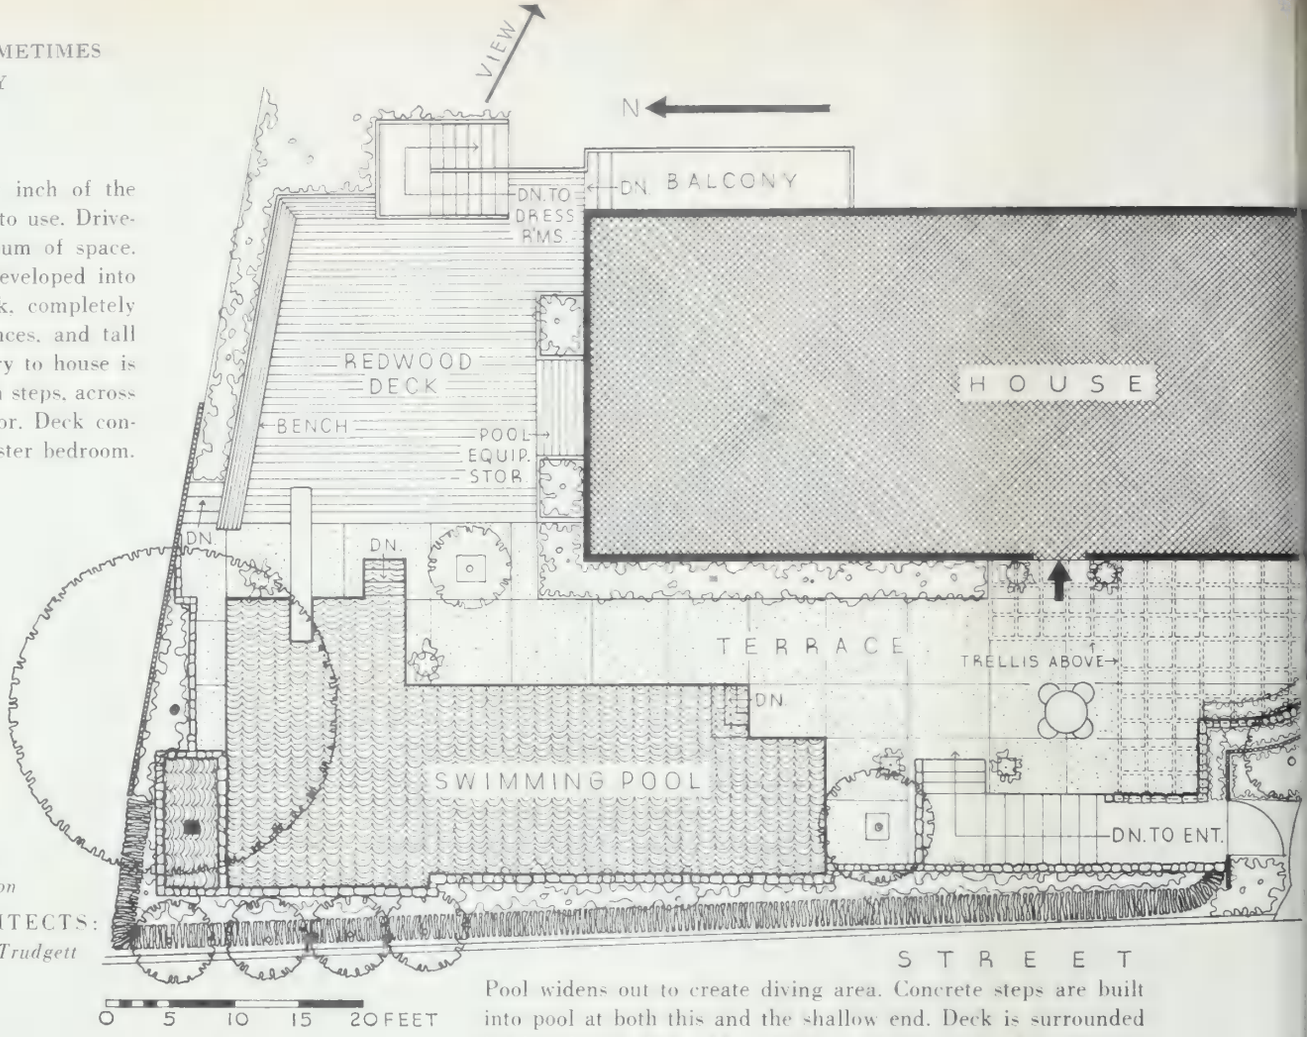
Earth moving:
Sometimes it's the only way

• Only 31 feet separated this house from the street, the land sloped badly in two directions, and the total lot was only 120′ by 100′. Yet out of this seemingly impossible situation came a completely new and private world: a large L-shape swimming pool, a shaded terrace, a 600-square-foot deck for sunning and entertaining, and a lower level with two dressing rooms. How was it all done?

The cross-section drawings at the right explain how radical earth moving did the job. Stone retaining walls at the street line and along one side allowed complete leveling of the former driveway area. This was the only solid ground into which to place the pool. An extensive deck, supported on posts, was built over the filled area around the end of the house. It continued the terrace level and connected it to the master bedroom. Under the deck, there was enough height for the two dressing rooms. A new shorter driveway leads straight from the street to the garage.

See plan and photographs on next two pages.

DRAWINGS BY MADELAINE THATCHER



Before regrading, land sloped this way from the garage and toward the back steeply. Exposed front yard was used only for driveway. In regrading, earth cut away from high side was used to fill low side. Deck now continues level of terrace.

EARTH MOVING: SOMETIMES IT'S THE ONLY WAY

Plan shows how every inch of the property has been put to use. Driveway takes up a minimum of space. Rest of area is fully developed into terrace, pool, and deck, completely protected by walls, fences, and tall planting in depth. Entry to house is now through gate, down steps, across terrace to the front door. Deck connects to balcony of master bedroom.

Pool widens out to create diving area. Concrete steps are built into pool at both this and the shallow end. Deck is surrounded by bench-rail that adds extensive seating area. All planting pockets use pebble mulch around shrubs to cut maintenance.

Right: Land drops so sharply at rear of lot that another full story is created. New steps lead down to two dressing rooms below deck. Below: Remodeling the garden created over 600 sq. ft. of new deck space for entertaining.

Why a garden needs more than plants

Our lives depend upon our relationship with the forces of nature. This vital marriage is dramatized and reinforced when the creative efforts of mankind are well displayed in a setting of natural beauty.

By ELSIE LOUISE SCULTHORP

▪ Nature. in her grandest manifestations of forest. waterfall. and canyon can be absolutely overwhelming. This may be why we mortals have always found ways to record ourselves as part of the natural scene. The prehistoric paintings in the cave of Lascaux are part of the same basic drive that leads to putting man-made objects in a garden.

This same need also leads to such abominations as pink flamingos. plaster gnomes. and concrete mushrooms on the lawn. But we must learn that only the works revealing meaningful aspects of man's esthetic potential are worthy of the natural scene—or any scene. for that matter.

When man-made objects are seen in a natural setting. each is enhanced by the other. A living green branch seems more colorful. alive. and transient when seen against the stone of a piece of sculpture. The stone, compared to the branch. seems more solid and permanent. But each is in a state of change. The branch changes daily. the stone weathers slowly. We. who must live with a variety of rhythms. in different phases. can find reassurance in the unity of this seeming contrast. The feature on flower arranging (pages 92 to 113) reveals further avenues of cooperation (Please turn the page)

The two lovely scenes shown above and at the left are from the same garden. Each of them is an artful blending of exquisite man-made and natural materials. Here you have such delights as the majesty of important sculpture. the sound of falling water. the play of light and shadow. espaliered trees. trimmed hedges. and such practical considerations as a gravel ground cover for non-muddy walking. Garden of Mr. and Mrs. Paul R. Trousdale. Phil Shipley and Dudley Trudgett, landscape architects.

"The garden has many aspects, many side paths that open out . . . At first sight, perhaps, with the beauty of the thing in front of you . . the theme may appear so complete that all meandering after side issues may seem sheer wantonness. As you proceed, however, it becomes apparent that you may not treat of a garden and disregard the instincts it prompts . . . its office in the world is a sweetener of human life. Behind the garden is the man who made it, and his house."

A work of art, such as this Kwan Yin, Chinese goddess of mercy, could stand alone, but is more meaningful when seen in direct relationship to nature. Mercy, we must assume, is natural to man.

Wood carving, beside a sprinkler head, draws the eye from the unesthetic fixture, and also, by its larger size, clearly marks this spot by a small footbridge as a place to watch your step.

our minds about garden ornaments as we must about plants—we can't have everything we want. A total effect of charm, simplicity, and repose should be our aim. The garden itself is the important thing, and ornaments should be used only where they will complete it, not compete with it.

Gardens are a refuge and a solace in these hectic days, places for peace, solitude, and tranquility. Ornaments should be chosen to reflect a feeling of peace and charm and should be used only where they will do so.

We must know when to let well enough alone. What we select and place in our gardens will reveal our level of taste. As Chesterton said, ". . . it is considered more withering to accuse a man of bad taste than of bad ethics."

A sundial is a charming garden accessory, and by its form, its pedestal, and more particularly by a carefully chosen inscription, it can give a personal touch to the garden. It should be placed, of course, where it will be in the sun at all times, perhaps where paths meet.

If you like to watch birds, a few attractive but inconspicuous bird feeders, either standing or hanging, are suitable accessories.

Put them where they will not be exposed to the sun all day, and where they can be seen from (Please turn the page)

One large and fine object of art is more effective than a number of smaller commonplace things. This Etruscan jar is the only man-made accent in the entry court at the house of Landscape Architects Marie and Arthur Berger. Moving shadows add seeming life to figures.

The horizontal markings and gray color of birch bark are echoed in the pattern and color of this fine carved-marble Chinese finial. The man-made and the natural successfully enhance each other.

"A garden, like a house, needs to be furnished so that it will be comfortable for the gardener and his guests. A seat placed where a tired gardener can sit for a few moments . . . a birdbath where one who loves birds can sit and watch them. . . . A garden bears the same relation to our outdoor life as our house does to our indoor life. Keep furnishings at a comfortable minimum."

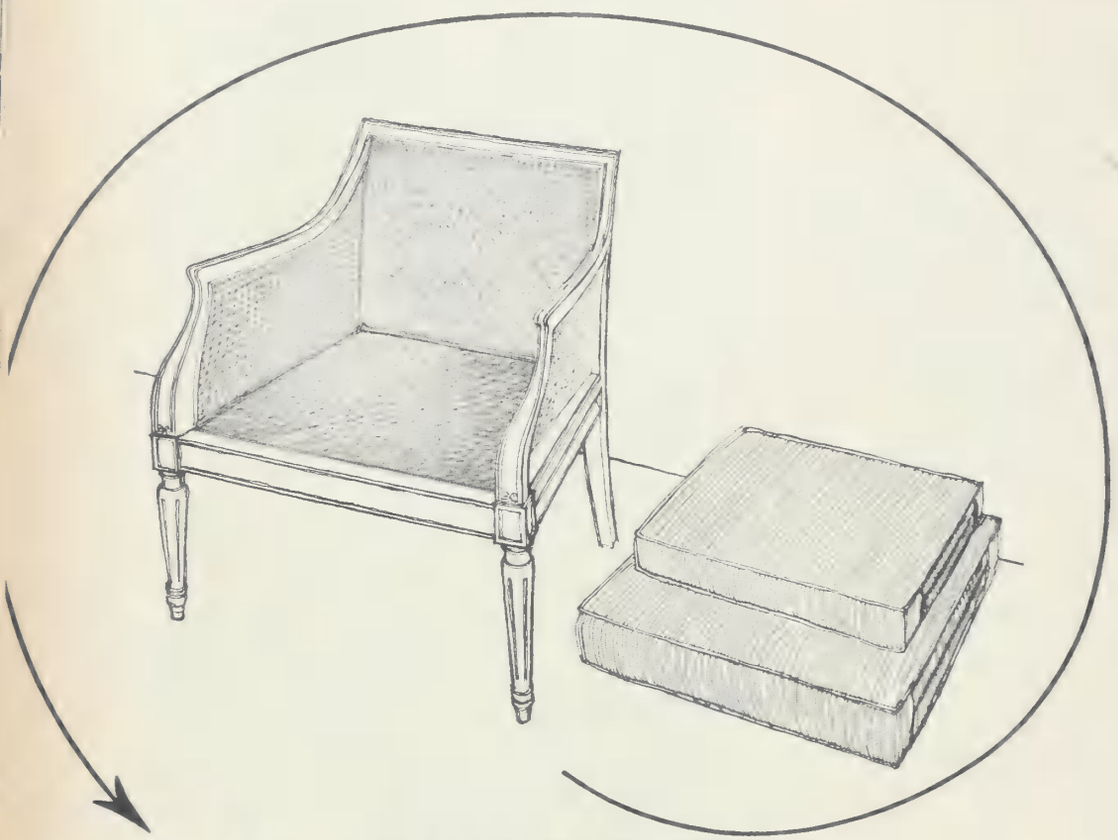
the house. The simpler the form, the better. A large fluted shell makes an interesting birdbath, particularly appropriate in a coastal garden. In my small, informal seashore garden, a small flat bowl on top of an ivy-covered cedar stump serves as a bird bath.

A small fountain or a single jet of water is always delightful in a garden. Birds love the spray, and everyone enjoys the sound of water. Fountains, like fireplaces, persist today, not as necessities in our lives, but as luxuries that somehow fill a peculiar psychological need. The sound and sight of a fountain are refreshing on a hot summer day, as are the sound and sight of a crackling fire on a cold winter night.

A garden pool can be delightful in the right setting. Its shape should be simple and in keeping with the spirit of the garden, and its size in keeping with the area in which it is placed. It can be shallow if only for reflecting, or deeper for growing water lilies. Be sure to have in your garden several pleasant places to sit, relax, eat, or shell peas. These might be on a terrace by the house, along a garden walk, or wherever you'd like to sit in sun or shade.

Sudden and short-lived showers are commonplace in Hawaii. This engaging little shelter provides a useful refuge as well as welcome contrast with the overpowering green.



At right is a decorative lattice summerhouse large enough for tea or a quiet rest. Lattice, in perfect character with the setting, relates structure to others here—in the same garden.

FOUR PHOTOGRAPHS BY J. PHILIP ROEDEL

Pictures on this page are from a Hawaiian garden. Growth here is so luxurious there's particular need for evidence of man's place in the scheme of things.

A chair for all seasons

▪ An unupholstered frame, with loose cushions and an additional set of slipcovers, adds up to one great buy in a chair. The homemaker need not be confined to a one-fabric chair. All of the chairs on these four pages are available with loose cushions, most with zippered covers. Covers in other fabrics can be ordered at time of purchase. Or they can be replaced when wear begins to show simply by taking only the cushions to an upholstery workroom.

Owning such chairs lets you change from a wintertime velvet cover to a summertime gay floral at the whisk of a zipper. Slipcovers chosen to fit the season or your whim is a simplified way to acquire a "new" chair.

Simple in form, classic in design, this well-proportioned chair deserves special attention. Its quality is due to the combination of imported woods and the extensive use of cane. Down-filled cushions are generous in size and geared to comfort. From Henredon.

Changing the "wardrobe" of this chair can be fun, since it would look well in any fabric. It is a sturdy little piece, made of rattan and cane. Notice the double caning all around. This strengthens it and gives it a finished look both inside and out. It was designed by Elinor McGuire for the McGuire Company.

First impressions of this chair might be deceiving. It is classified as a lounge chair, and yet the jauntiness of the design and the open quality make you wonder. How to make successful Flower Arrangements

• The desire to have flowers and growing plants around us is rooted in human beings' natural love for natural beauty. Since the beginning of time, people have picked flowers in the fields and enjoyed their beauty simply by holding them in their hands. Sometimes they would put them in their hair, or bring them home to decorate their abodes.

But since flowers wither if held in the hand, they must be put into water, which means having a container that holds water. So, willy-nilly, we are faced with the necessity of making an arrangement, which is to say a composition. We are proposing to transplant natural flowers from garden or fields and still preserve their inherent beauty. Just stuffing the stems into a vase, without thought except to give them water to preserve them, will not preserve their inherent beauty. True, a thoughtless bouquet is better than no bouquet. But it has a sadness about it that does not produce the tranquility and peace of mind that should result when beautiful flowers are beautifully arranged. An unloved bouquet, meaning a thoughtless one, is like a bright child who has never had any schooling—a wasted potential.

To hold a flower in one's hand is ideal— but not practical

Really, then, flower arranging is the molding of natural beauty into art. It is an act of selecting, assembling, and composing a variety of elements so they will then become a harmonious whole. Just as flowers are not seen all by themselves in nature, so they will not be seen alone in your rooms. All the other objects in the room come to bear on the flowers, affecting what container you choose, where to put the arrangement when it is done, what other accessories to bring close to it. A flower arrangement cannot exist in a vacuum.

How to develop the eyes to see what should be done?

I will tell you how the Japanese approach flower arranging. We

is better than no bouquet. One on far left is completely thoughtless. One on left is better, but certainly not memorable start by making ourselves intensely aware of nature. Being aware of how a plant grows is the basic element needed for making a beautiful arrangement. All natural things live at the mercy of nature: growing, reproducing, withering, dying. Trees, grasses, flowers grow buds, spread branches, bear flowers, and prepare seeds for the next generation, all according to the changes in the season, suffering wind, snow, drought, and pests. When the right season comes, the plants do what they must. They don't stop changing, even for a second. Even a single branch or blossom is the expression of its own kind of creation.

To know the construction of creation is the most important basic knowledge for ikebana, the Japanese word for flower arranging. Literally translated, ikebana means "live flower." To the Japanese, flower arranging is not merely putting flowers together in a container so they may drink water. They try to express the natural forms of the flowers, which are living, growing, changing. The flower arrangement should try to be an expression of the nature, of the very postures of those growing, changing flowers. But it cannot express all the changes that occur in nature. It catches one moment of life in that plant and expresses—in still form—its will to grow.

This almost-all-right arrangement

misses because the growing nature of the peonies (their long-stemmed posture) was ignored

Something is lost and some wrongness develops when flowers and branches are arranged in a form foreign to their way of growth.

When we arrange chrysanthemums, we suggest their behavior pattern by using fully blooming flowers together with just-opened ones and small buds. In other words, we aim to express the forms which the flowers, trees, and grasses take as they occur in nature. The arrangement should strive to capture the nature of the material and the process of growth. Naturally we cannot expect the growing to go on in the vases after we have arranged them. It is impossible to explain their whole process of growing. We can catch only a moment in their stream of life. The arranged (Please turn the page) flowers show a form of a moment in their life, but the arrangement may suggest their past and future.

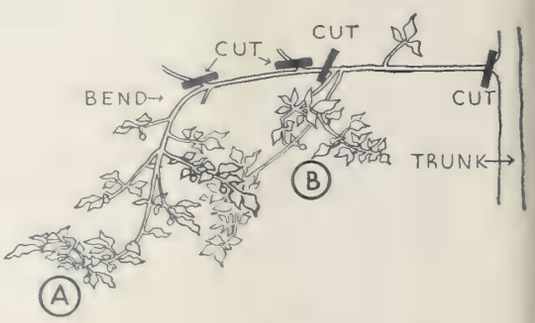
But the flower arrangement should not be an imitation of nature. It should be a creative act on your part. Just because you find some beautiful flowers along a path in the field and take them home for arrangement, you cannot recreate the total environment they had in the field. They would not be as beautiful as they were in the field, because after leaving their natural surroundings and being put into a man-made surrounding, their character requires some other touch to keep their beauty on the same level. This requires seeing eyes and creative hands.

The epitome of a thoughtless bouquet. One benefit: Flowers are getting a drink of water.



A fairly good arrangement, but yarrow is a long-stemmed, graceful plant, and this does not come through.

Flowers and trees change their shapes in obedience to their surroundings. The ones under graceful environment grow in their most natural forms. Those in severe conditions sometimes are felled by storms or pushed down by the snow. When they cannot receive the mercy of the sun, they spread their branches, reaching for warm sunbeams. The adaptability of plants or the indomitable will for life produces interesting shapes, lines, or colors. Anywhere in the fields, hills, or roadsides, you will find such arts of nature—plants naturally bent and twisted.

I fortunately found a branch of winged euonymus in the garden. It was bending low in an interesting form. (See top drawing.) I studied the branch carefully.

The branch had many stems, thickly grown. To give the definite directions and angles and to emphasize the interesting lines the branch had naturally, I thinned out these stems and leaves and bent the part shown on the lower drawing with my hands. The leaves were tinged with red, yellow, and other delicate shades. I hesitated to thin out those. But I forced myself to get a cleaner effect and I was right. When these excess leaves and branches were thick, their interesting colors and lines jostled each other too much. After thinning out, the branches showed their lines more clearly and the leaves shone brilliantly against the light.

I put two yellow spoon chrysanthemums at the feet of the branches, because yellow is strong enough to be a pivot for the arrangement, and this type has the same curled-tip feeling as the branches. Both represent the color of autumn. But with the tinged branches, the arrangement produced a real feeling of autumn, the season it then was.

The basic attitude for flower arranging is to know the nature of the plants and follow them, as I have mentioned repeatedly. Branches that grow and reach up have to be arranged in going-up forms. Branches or flowers that droop or grow downward must be arranged in that form.

Bittersweet and podocarpus were arranged to observe their natures. These two different characters were united by the three white chrysanthemums.

To show the interesting natural twists of the bittersweet, clip the small stems. The shibui green of the bronze vase enhances the red-yellow of the bittersweet.

In this arrangement, the chrysanthemums should be white. If they were some other color, the prettiness of the bittersweet would not be set off and the whole impression would become weaker.

A drooping-form arrangement is better placed on higher places, about eye level. If you look down on it, it loses the charm of its drooping lines. Places like mantels and bookshelves are suitable. The two silver birds seem as if they were attracted by the berries of the bittersweet.

This is another arrangement which represents the fall season.

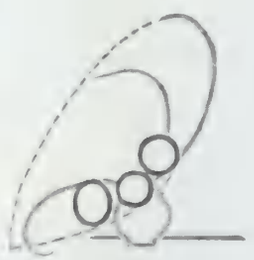
Along the vertical lines of the windows, the green of the Scotch broom goes up vertically, too. But the latter has soft, curving lines, as if they could be waved to and fro by a breeze or by sunbeams. The green of the broom invites the green of the outdoors and connects with the green of the chairback and the mohair throw. This arrangement would be good for a corner of a living room for a warm fall afternoon.

Soft, smooth lines of the Scotch broom group closely together at the bottom on a frog, and the big, dark red, bulky chrysanthemums complete the form, giving accent by their color and their good-size round shape. They could not be bent or much manipulated. Differences in height made them fit in better.

The broom is one of the easiest plants with which you can make lines as you want them to be. Grip the broom gently and bend it in your palm. Don't cross stems: they should be parallel.



When you transfer into flower arrangements the natural forms of any trees or flowers which they showed in their own environment, the arrangements are not always beautiful works. The beauties of arranged trees and flowers are produced by the combinations of branches, leaves, and flowers in the sizes (large and small), in the length (long and short), in the heaviness and lightness, or hardness and softness in the colors (light and shade, or bright and dark). When the combinations of these elements are in the proper proportion, the viewer feels that the work is beautiful. These proportions develop from small to large, relatively and continuously. But these proportions are measured not only by lengths of the branches or flowers. The quantities, spaces, masses, qualities, and colors—all these elements make the proportions. The strong, bright colors (as of red roses) are much stronger than the pale colors (as of pink carnations), even when the first is smaller in size than the latter. The glossy leaves of the rubber plant, magnolia, and some tropical plants have stronger characters than the matte face. Thin leaves, like those of the plantain lily, or the clear-cut, shaped leaves of caladium give a stronger impression than the round, irregular shapes of the hollyhock. The globular shape of the marigold is stronger than that of a same-size flat flower like cosmos. Thus, the proportions are shown in very complicated ways. It would be impossible to say simply, "The main three branches should be seven-five-three in length."

Look at the drawing. The (1) and (2) of the asparagus sprengeri go up high and (3) goes down, curling toward the front. These three lines have long lengths. But the thin, needle-shape leaves of the sprengeri are weaker than the three chrysanthemums that are arranged very low at the neck of the vase. Even these chrysanthemums are cut low, but the focus of this arrangement is on them.

Balance is important in making the arrangements beautiful. (1) and (2) go high up toward the right. If there were not the (3) branch, which goes down left, the arrangement would seem top-heavy.

These curving lines which the sprengeri have are natural. It's not necessary to bend them artificially. When you buy a bunch of this fern from the florist, you may find a few naturally bent, interesting branches. Three chrysanthemums sit at the key points to connect two lines of (1), (2), and (3), which go in different directions. And these give the strong focus to this arrangement.

Only three sprengeri are used in this arrangement. The thin, needle-shape leaves show more delicate beauty when they are seen with light coming from the back (both sunbeams and artificial lights). Don't use these massively.

The large, natural-wood stand adds to the stable, balanced feeling—important for a tall arrangement in a small vase.

In this arrangement, the same asters (shown opposite) are arranged in the vertical form. The power of growth is emphasized by the tall, slender cattails. No horizontal branches at all. The vertical form is natural for almost every flower. It does not give an unsteady feeling to the arrangement. (This is the difference between flowers and non-living objects, which give relief when they take the horizontal forms.)

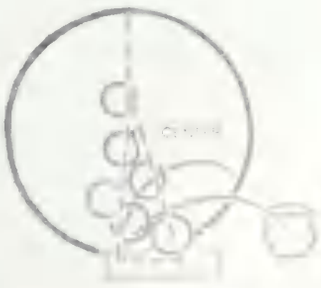
The vertical arrangement is received steadily into the shallow rectangular container of heavy, white milk glass.



The big, round tray in the background about 2½′ (approximately the same height as the arrangement), silhouettes the vertical line of the cattails and coordinates with the round aster. It unifies the interesting interaction of the shapes with each other: A round tray contrasts against cattails and is similar to asters and the small bowl; a rectangular, shallow vase contrasts against the tall arrangement, yet echoes the circle of the table and the runner.

The round tray has no stability when it stands alone. The small but heavy bowl sitting at the right produces a steadiness or balance.

The round tray should be nearly as big as the height of the arrangement.

The fern leaves pointing up and downward with gentle curves blend all the lines.

The vertical line of the arrangement sits on the center of the tray. But the vase is off center toward the bowl. Two fern leaves stretched more to the right connect the bowl and the arrangement.

This kind of chrysanthemum bears the flower at the top of its tall stems. In accordance with this nature, these were arranged in the most natural and uncomplicated form. Though this is done simply, there are still some techniques used to show the slender beauty which these chrysanthemums have. The tall form is slenderized with the slightly curved lines. To get those lines, cut out the excess flowers and stalks, leaving the one you want. This is easier than bending it with your hands. The stems of the chrysanthemums are quite easily broken.

There are four groups in this arrangement: Group 1—The tallest part consists of four flowers. Group 2—The three flowers bending toward the right at $\frac{2}{3}$ the height of the Group 1. Group 3—Two flowers on the left at $\frac{1}{3}$ the height. Group 4—The lowest group of three flowers. These cover the stems and stabilize the arrangement. Use large, full-bloom flowers.

They say: "When you arrange chrysanthemums, you had better try to arrange the leaves rather than the flowers." Of course, this is an exaggeration. But we should know that the leaves have a very important role. Unfortunately it is rather difficult to buy chrysanthemums at the florist's which have been so carefully handled the leaves are not spoiled. If you can get chrysanthemums in your garden, you are lucky. Cut them in early morning (with dew on them) with as long stems as possible. Immediately soak them in cold water. When you arrange them, snap them with your fingers, instead of cutting them with a scissors. Chrysanthemums are one of the plants that have difficulty getting water.

This natural and unaffected arrangement would be a good companion for the breakfast table.

Using woody branches, especially if they are bare of leaves but in bud, is a way to get a strong, characterful arrangement. Branches that are twisted are often more interesting than perfect ones. Only a few flowers are needed to soften the stark effect of the branches. White flowers are a safe bet, but it is more interesting to relate the flower color to some tonal quality in the branches. We tell elsewhere how to anchor such heavy branches in containers.

PHOTOGRAPH BY HOWARD GRAFF

From early spring till June, you can get the various kinds of dogwood. Their branches usually spread out. Then you had better trim them before arranging them. For the leaves are very thick, and to emphasize the plain white petals, you had better thin out leaves.

Study the branches carefully and decide with which branch you'll make the main line. In this photo, the main branch was cleaned almost into one curved line, cutting out all other smaller branches. Woody materials like dogwood, pine, magnolia, and quince are stiff and hard to bend with your hands to make desirable lines. It is much easier to trim protruding branches into clean lines. Woody materials are generally good for big-scale arrangements against walls or in a corner.

Dogwood petals are pale pink and white. Better use a strong-colored, contrasting vase. In this photo, the arrangement is rather tall, about 30 inches, the vase is 15 inches tall.

Queen Anne's lace is a common weed, but its fine petals are delicate and pretty. Pick a bunch of them and arrange them thoughtfully. They have soft, slender stems. Without difficulty you can get interestingly bent or curved stems. Use them massively to form a ~ shape. The vase should be a strong color. The pure, delicate look of white, lacy flowers stands up well against a contrasting strong color.

The real joy of flower arranging is to find small flowers, unknown weeds, or interesting branches in the fields and arrange them. Florists everywhere are full of colorful flowers and gorgeous plants, undoubtedly beautiful. But when you stroll in your garden, down a lane, or in the fields, you find whole fields covered with the Queen Anne's lace. The lacy delicacy of hundreds of small white petals increases its beauty when seen against solid green [illegible] leaves. But the leaves should have the same delicacy in their curved [illegible]. Put fingers on both sides of the leaf and [illegible] them toward the tip, pressing the leaf. You will get interesting, graceful lines.

SUCCESSFUL FLOWER ARRANGEMENTS

Roses have been loved as the queen of flowers in many countries for many centuries. Red roses are gorgeous, but sometimes they are so perfect they are arrogant. In other words, they are too perfectly beautiful (as if artificial) to make one recall the natural environment in which they grew. That's why roses are pretty enough to put one flower at a time in a vase without any study—even though the massive arrangement might conceivably be more attractive.

To counteract their arrogant perfectness, such gorgeous red roses might be arranged in a simple basket of rustic texture and form. The half-open roses should stand higher than the fully-open big ones, which are massively arranged in the center. It means that the half-open roses express their growing power. A small bud, arranged in a low position at an important spot, gives a fresh, growing feeling.

The sophisticated beauty of the rose contrasts almost philosophically against the rustic basket container. A dark green leather desk and the geometrical pattern of the antique-green malachite cigarette box go well with the gorgeous beauty of the roses. This arrangement is a nice touch for a calm, traditional library.

These yellow roses, small and half-open, have simpler and neater beauty than the bulky red roses.

The flowing lines of the eucalypti are free and natural, as if they could swing in a breeze. Such soft, natural lines are repeated again in the container. The edge of the container should not be covered with flowers.

The proportion of the roses and eucalypti, in quantity and height, is important to create a light and fresh feeling. Rhythmical lines are the key to this arrangement. The rhythmical lines start from one spot as if they were growing from one root. All these stems are put together tightly in a frog.

You should not have any difficulty finding eucalypti which have interesting, naturally flowing lines. But you can easily give more accent by bending them slightly with your fingers.

Looking at the drawing, you will see by the dotted lines that three branches were slightly reshaped. Number One, the center in the arrangement, is bent back with the fingers to prevent the line from going to the right.

The beauty of flowers is most fully appreciated when they are at their best, which is to say when they are going to bloom (buds) and when they are fully open. However, after having gone past their best time, some flowers still retain a beauty of an entirely different sort. I mean dried flowers. They are not as colorful or fragrant as they once were, but some kind of charm exists in their brownish, beige, or off-white flowers, seeds, pods, and leaves. Texture is one of their best charms: crepy leaves, feathery heads, and translucent petals. The key to successful dry-flower arrangements lies in how cleverly you can blend these different textures. Their containers are another key. As a general rule, a vivid color or pure white sets off the dark, natural colors of the materials.

In this arrangement, the eucalypti grow and spread into air from the tall, thin, but flaring container. The line of the vase spreads open at the mouth and that line continues with the eucalypti.

The brilliant yellows of the compote of apples and bowl bring a warm feeling into the room even on gloomy winter days.

We should not expect the same kind of beauty in dry flowers as in living flowers. Dry flowers are neither imitations of nor substitutes for living flowers. But natural, weathered-looking colors and dark colors have their own charms, which we cannot find among blooming plants.

Even though browns are not colorful, they can have great variety. A blend of sepias and off-white beiges make a stylish color scheme. The proportion of beige and sepia of these leaves (below) can be manipulated by you according to the color scheme of the room where the arrangement is to be placed. Against dark-colored walls, sofas, or draperies, a bigger proportion of the white side of the leaves would work better. For a bright room scheme like white walls, bright green chairs, or white marble table top, the darker side of the leaves would be better.

After some flowers have passed their peak-time beauty, they start to dry and turn brown. If cut at this interesting moment, these make excellent shibui materials for compositions. Clean the branches, leaving only a few leaves for the contrast in shape and color and so the remaining leaves can make a strong, crisp impression when they're seen against the dried flowers.

Dried materials are almost impossible to bend to make desirable lines. Study the whole branches carefully, so you will be able to create interesting lines by judicious pruning and trimming.

White bonbon chrysanthemums are strong enough to make up for the weakness of the stems of the hydrangeas. They should be in white and massively used to give the impression of vivid life. The curved lines of the wooden stand repeat the same interesting lines of the hydrangea's branch.

Love apples (physalis), reaching out to the left, are held safe by the tall, heavy pottery vase. It functions as a container, but it also symbolizes the trunk of a tree that has both the weight and the strength to support the wide spread of the branches.

Philodendron leaves that have wide surfaces, like these in the arrangement, are very hard to arrange. When such leaves all face the same direction, the effect is dull. If they face in entirely opposite directions, the arrangement seems busy and cluttery. The directions and the angles of the leaves delicately affect the whole arrangement. Try again and again until you can achieve a form that you are satisfied with.

Against the long-stretched branches at the left, one leaf is placed low at the right to keep the balance. But if this leaf droops completely down, it means the leaf is going to die and oppose its nature. So even though the stem droops, the leaf points up, symbolizing the power of growing.

The interest of this arrangement lies in the contrast of the different qualities of the materials: in colors (red and green), in shapes (small, globular, and flat), in texture (rough and glossy).

Wistaria flowers give us great pleasure in the spring. But most people never notice the charm of their velvety green pods that develop in fall and stay on the vine all winter. Here is almost foolproof material to arrange.

By their very nature, wistaria pods droop. So there is your line for such an arrangement. Cut off all the leaves. Velvety pods hanging on young, flexible newly grown branches, which in turn connect to aged-looking, stiff branches, make an interesting contrast, but they also say something philosophically about new life being rooted in old life.

Small white chrysanthemums which are not too rich or big, jut at the feet of the wistaria branches, add a quiet and clean accent.

To harmonize with the shibui character of the plant materials, the container should be simple and delicate—not gaudy. The bamboo basket is a folk-art product made for daily use. Its natural color, its finely woven design and natural shininess contribute to the charm of this understated arrangement.

The arrangement is completed with a round red lacquer box, a small blue and white porcelain box, and a bamboo tray. The lacquer box brings a sharp accent to the quiet beauty of the arrangement. But it should not be too big. If it is, it will attract too much attention and destroy the whole delicate, shibui syndrome.

This composition is arranged mainly for harmonized tranquility rather than strong contrast.

The basic forms for arranging

• There are many books written about flower arranging—what the basic forms are, how to compose, how to arrange, etc. Also, there are varied schools of thought in flower arrangements. Some are in agreement on certain methods, some opposed. But there is one basic principle in flower arranging.

Flowers never lose their strong self-reliance, produced by coping with the conditions of nature—which is sometimes most cruel to them. They always spread their roots under the ground, and they always grow to the sun.

A flower, by itself, is pretty enough with its color and its form. But a flower is far prettier when it is seen with its leaves, stems, and branches. We know they look their best when seen in their natural surroundings. But it is impossible to transfer these things into a room. A flower loses its vivid glory when it is cut from the ground and is apart from its natural surroundings. Here, the flower arrangement differs from other creative compositions: The material used for creativity is "living." Don't forget that the materials themselves contain the strength and the direction to grow.

Stability is generally considered one of the important keys for esthetic form. Most stable forms require the horizontal line against the vertical line. Flowers, except for a few species, have the self-contained power to keep their balance upward, through being rooted in the ground. We should try to keep that look of growing power, even after flowers are arranged. When this is achieved in the forms of the arrangements, you are more likely to create true ikebana (living flower), rather than mere arbitrary forms. Therefore, vases should suggest the ground, or the ponds, or the earthy base out of which the flowers are growing. Containers should not be thought of just as vessels to hold water.

As the flowers could not exist by themselves apart from natural surroundings, the flower arrangements cannot be independent, cannot exist without relation to other objects around them. In other words, the arrangements are not completed without vase, table, place mats, lamps, ashtrays, and other useful objects.

There are many symbols and concepts in Japanese flower-arranging: the Heaven-Man-Earth rule; or that each flower has to have certain proportion against the others; or that there be an odd number of flowers, etc. These rules might help you, but they may also confuse you. Sharp observation and a close love of nature are better ways to learn. Too often the rules produce stereotyped and uniform arrangements, rather than expressive forms.

As I mentioned, we should not aim to arrange just "good-looking" forms. Such superficial techniques are sure to be revealed in the finished arrangements. You have to discover the real nature of your materials and proceed out of this understanding. Since all materials will be different, no arrangement will ever be like any other.

When you first get the materials, study them from all angles and decide which side to see them from. Then make up your mind what form will best bring out their innate lives and characters. After having pictured the arrangement in your mind, pick out the vase that goes best with the form, color, and size of your materials.

Study the flowers and branches carefully again. Cut out some flowers and branches, if necessary; too many will spoil the interesting lines of the important branches. If there are too many flowers too close together, the individual beauty of the flowers will be lost. You may resist doing this, but you will be surprised at the result. Fewer flowers or branches almost always produce more attractive forms and lines.

How to know about basic lines

This is easily explained. Trees growing under completely favorable surroundings grow symmetrically, their branches equally balanced in all directions. But when they have unfavorable and unbalanced growing conditions, such as sun from only one direction, or a severe exposure to winds from one direction, they always change into unsymmetrical shapes. (To Japanese eyes the latter is more interesting.) But they still keep a balance in their unsymmetrical forms.

The basic forms of Japanese flower-arranging stem originally from such ideas about the nature of trees. It has been greatly simplified through many centuries and by many generations of practitioners.

There are three basic lines in an arrangement, just as in the bone structure of the human body. As shown in the drawings below, the three lines are the basis of the arrangement. When you add more material, add along these same basic lines, regardless of how many flowers or branches you want to arrange.

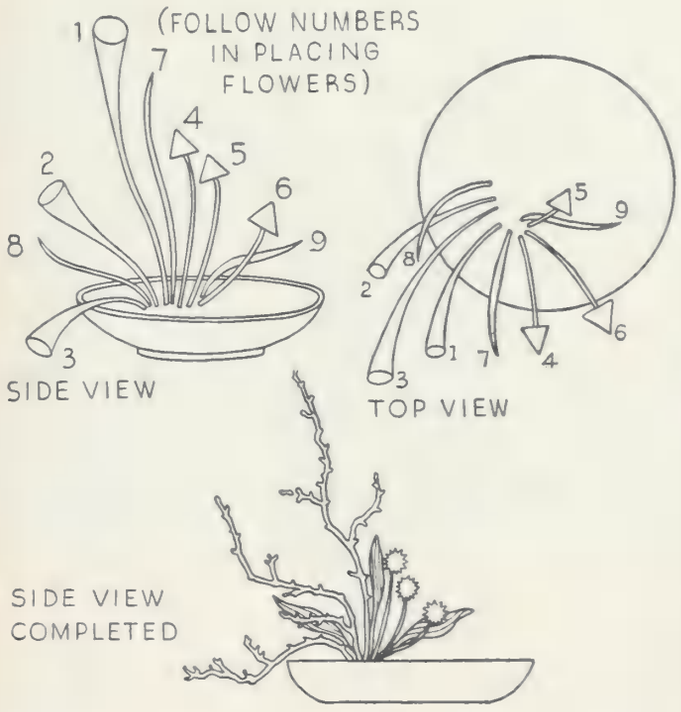
Ironically, if you study the original documents written by the founders of Japanese flower arrangement, you find that they were against frozen ideas and fixed rules. (Please turn the page)

"In flower arranging, there is no fixed line of flowers and branches. The natural shapes which the plants have by their natures are important."

"Flowers should be the way they were in the fields."

"To know about plum, ask plum."

These quotations are philosophical. However, we can pick up the spirit of these founders in the early days.



You are allowed to arrange flowers in any forms, just as you like. Feel quite free to create any new forms. But it is quite hard to create excellent forms without studying and practicing for a long time.

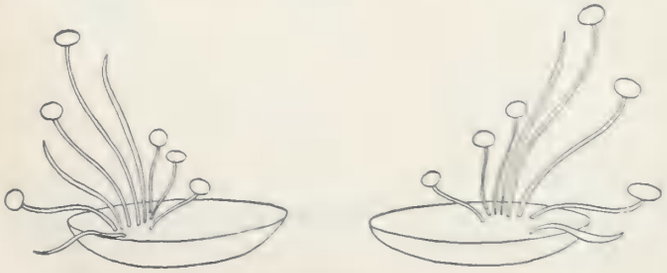
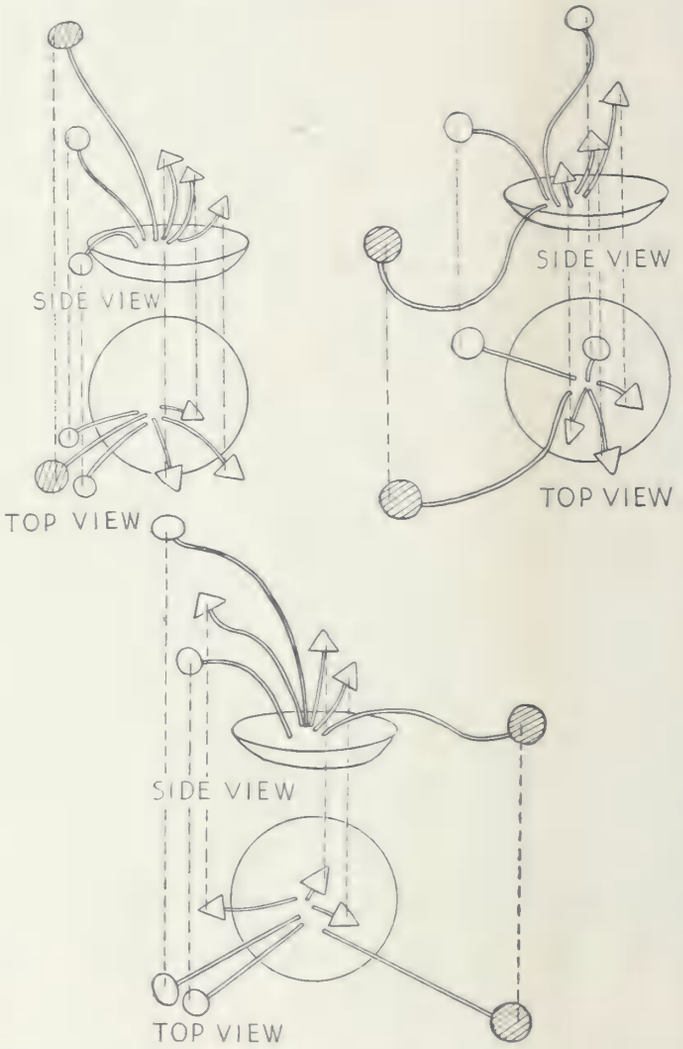
Arrangements in shallow containers



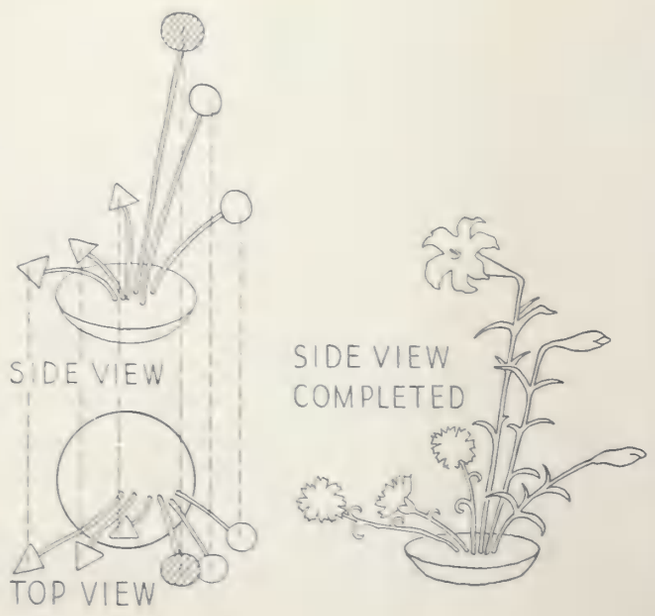
INCLINED FORM

These drawings show the most typical form arranged in a shallow container. All flowers incline toward the front (toward the viewer), but still look stable.

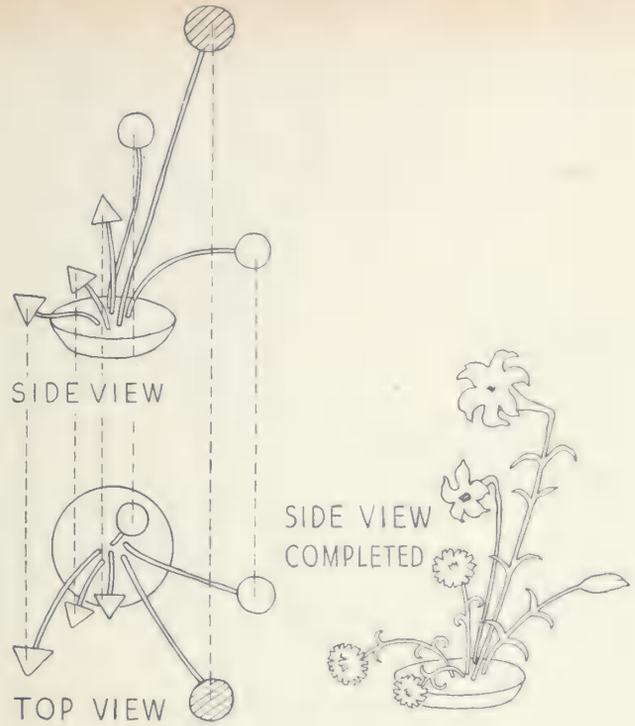


When you get flowers and branches, they naturally have various lines and forms. You should look at them carefully and decide which should be arranged in what shapes to show their best lines and most beautiful points.

The basic forms can vary toward the left or the right, according to the natural bent of the materials.

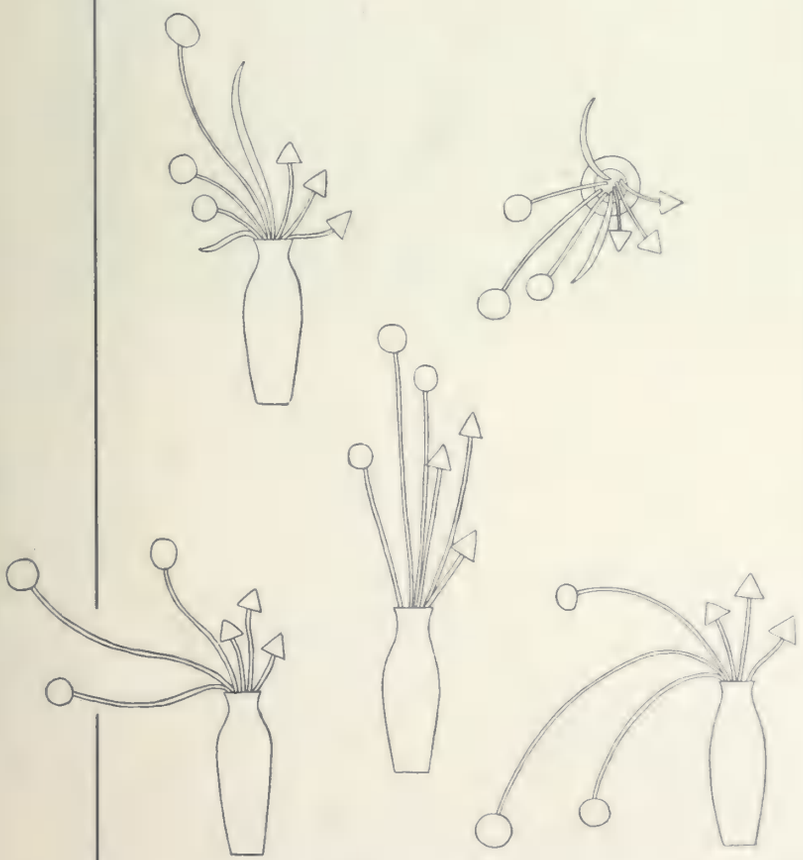


VARIATIONS OF THE INCLINED FORM



The three forms shown here are based on the one above. In principle, the forms are the same. But naturally the lines, forms, and relations of each flower have to be changed slightly, depending upon the natures of the materials used.

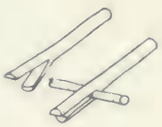
UPRIGHT FORM



Upright forms are good for flowers that grow tall and straight up, such as large chrysanthemums, gladiolas, and pussy willows.

Arrangements in tall vases

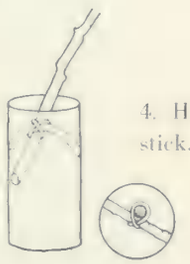
In comparison with flower arrangements in shallow containers, the arrangements in tall containers are simpler and lighter in their feeling. One or two kinds of plants look more natural and less contrived.



As the shape of the vases is tall and narrow, drooping lines harmonize well. Spiraea thunbergii, forsythia, climbing roses, the fern and ivy families, eucalyptus, and asparagus fern have drooping forms by their nature, so they work well.

Some materials will arrange well in this form, even though they are not drooping by nature, such as plum, pine tree, Japanese maple, azalea, small-flowered chrysanthemum, wistaria, hydrangea, sweet pea, bittersweet, and mimosa. These take more manipulating skill by the arranger.

Flower arrangements in tall vases look simple and clean in effect. But actually the technique is harder than the ones in shallow vases because of the mechanical technique of holding things. It's particularly difficult to hold flowers steady in porcelain vases. Here are several ways:



1. For rather small, not-too-tall vases, regular frogs can be used. If vases are too deep, place sand on the bottom of the vases and put the frog on the sand.

2. Split a branch two to three inches and squeeze a small wood stick into it. Then cut it to make a very tight fit across the vase.

3. Tie a wood stick to the branch.

4. Hold the branches with a smaller, bent stick.

In this type of Japanese flower arrangement, fork-shape twigs are used as the fixtures. Cut the twig a little longer than the width of the vase, and insert it about one inch into the vase. Then it will stay there firmly. After flowers are arranged, another piece is inserted to cross over and anchor it all. This is the basic method in Japanese arrangement. (Actually this is very difficult. I recommend the first way.)

About materials

Flower arranging is often called "the art of combination." What is brought together is the key to the arrangement.

If the flowers are not fresh or have lost their natural shape by being crushed together, we cannot compose them into an excellent arrangement, even using the best technique.

You have to make up your mind when you choose the materials. If you want to emphasize the beauty of green leaves, you'd better use only a few flowers as an accent. If the flowers are so gorgeous, you had better use only a little bit of green as the background. If the lines of the branches are very interesting, add only a few flowers in order not to hide the branches. For broad, big leaves, use flowers with small delicate petals.

Materials arranged together have to have something in common. They may seem to contrast in colors or shape at first glance, but they should have something in common in their feeling, qualities, seasons they grow, places of birth, etc. Many subtleties come into play in successful flower arranging. But beware of the coy, the sentimental, the saccharine. These are not attractive or lasting traits. (Please turn to page 125)

The new lightweight, portable Outdoor Foods

Listen to a woman who, with her husband and teen-age son, lived on the new freeze-dry foods for a 13,000-mile exploration of the back woods of Canada. Her story foreshadows instant abundance, everywhere, any time

By DOLLY CONNELLY

▪ Up until now, outdoor foods meant barbecue or picnic foods. But recently a whole new category has appeared that is just as revolutionary and strange and queer as frozen foods were in the 1930's. This new category of food has been preserved by accelerated freezing and drying (called AFD for short).

Freeze-dry foods are worth getting acquainted with now, especially if you camp, hike, boat, or fly. If space and weight are crucial factors in provisioning yourself, AFD foods offer tremendous advantages. Getting the hang of them now will pay off later, too. For in five to ten years, AFD foods will be very much in evidence in home kitchens, just as frozen foods are prevalent now.

In fact, AFD foods are present in home kitchens now. If you use any soups from Lipton, Knorr, Maggi, or Campbell's Red Kettle soups, you are using AFD at its very best.

The freeze-dry process isn't new. Pharmaceutical houses have been using it for many years to preserve sensitive water-soluble drugs, blood plasma, serum, etc. New only is the adaptation to large-scale food preservation.

Making foods keep has been a problem for mankind ever since an enterprising Cro-Magnon type brought home an antelope too large to be consumed at a single meal. Earliest preservation was accomplished by air-drying and smoke-drying. The use of salt in preservation of meats was an immense step forward. Then came canning, invented by a French chef in 1804 to feed Napoleon's armies on the move. Frozen foods hit full stride in the Second World War, which gave impetus to still another breakthrough in food preservation—Accelerated Freeze-Drying.

AFD is the least destructive technique yet devised for holding foods. It is conceded in food-processing circles to cause far less change in flavor, texture, and fragrance than heat-drying, canning, or even freezing. Foods—raw or cooked—first are quick-frozen at extremely low temperatures and then dried, with various radiation heat sources according to the method employed, in vacuum chambers. The vacuum causes ice crystals in the food to sublimate, which is a fancy way to say that they are transformed directly into water vapor and withdrawn without an intermediary melting step. Textures of foods are preserved. There is no breakdown of cell walls.

The process thus skims off the best qualities of freezing and dehydrating to protect foods against adverse chemical, enzymatic, and microbial changes—the alterations we lump together and call spoilage. Some 95 percent of moisture is removed, but as the porous cellular structure of the food remains unchanged, reconstitution is quick. Like sponges, they take up moisture instantly.

The stuff is magic. In meats, weight reduction is almost unbelievable: four ounces become one. High-water-content foods, fruits and vegetables, are downright spectacular in reduction. Corn kernels and fresh peas become elfin ping-pong balls. A bunch of spinach looks like a teaspoonful of dried marjoram. Sliced bananas are weightless, dime-size discs. Fruit and vegetable juices become crystals or powders.

More often than not, the finished foods are adroit combinations of two processing procedures, freeze-drying and ordinary dehydration. Soup essences are first dried, and then the mix is enlivened with addition of bits of freeze-dried ingredients. Sometimes the AFD product undergoes a second step—compressing—to avoid the bulkiness of straight freeze-dries, which retain their original volume despite drastic reduction in weight. Cooked meat and bacon bars are good examples of this technique. Three-ounce solid chunks of bacon equal one pound of uncooked bacon—splendid if crumbled into eggs, the bean pot, salad dressings, or soufflés.

AFD works best with foods cut into small pieces or thinnish slices. Nutritive values—even unstable vitamins—are believed to be preserved unharmed. Preparation time for the foods varies from instantaneous (dissolving time for citrus crystals) to half an hour for the kind of dish that improves with simmering—chili con carne, for example.

Cooking procedures are within the prowess of a Cub Scout, usually call only for soaking and gentle simmering or sautéing. (Please turn to page 128)

Wonders of the Wilderness

Minutes from your doorstep, all the calming therapy of nature primeval may be waiting to delight and teach you and refresh your spirit

By MARION GOUGH

• Wilderness is described as "an area where the earth and its community of life are untrammeled by man, where man himself is a visitor who does not remain." It is nature primeval, where flora and fauna, rocks and waters pursue their continuous cycle of birth, growth, death, and renewal—nature maintaining its own balance with no interference from man.

Wilderness is precious. For there is something in all human beings which seems to need wilderness. Man, whether he realizes it consciously or not, has an urge to run away from what he has made for himself in order to renew his contact with the world as it was before he put his mechanical mark on it.

"In the forest," Emerson said, "we return to reason and faith"; and it would seem that most of us feel the truth of this instinctively. Why else do we plan that month in the country or the picnic at the seashore? What else impels us to plant a geranium in a window box or to take the long way home through the park? In ways like this we prove how much we are groping for a taste of the wild, the real world, as opposed to the manipulated one we live in.

Most of us, though, don't realize how very much we need the wilderness in our lives until we've actually experienced the real thing. Listen, for instance, to a housewife who has just taken her first pack-trip through the High Sierras, or has lately ridden the morning-misted meadows at Jackson Hole. Hear a usually desk-bound executive describe his initial go-round with a snorkel and the underwater seascape in St. John's Trunk Bay. Or listen to the neophyte who has just hiked his first trail in the Appalachians. New worlds! That's what they've discovered—new, thrilling worlds, revealing sights and sounds and smells they never dreamed existed, full of lessons to help put the universe into focus. Almost invariably, the first adventure whets the appetite for more, besides turning the adventurer into an evangelist, urging everyone else to go out and do likewise.

Where should you go for your first taste of the pristine? The rest of the country tends to think that Westerners have an inside track on the wilds because some of our most spectacular National Parks are in the West. But wonderful bits of wilderness exist everywhere, country-wide, under the aegis of The Nature Conservancy, a private organization whose members concern themselves with the preservation of nature as pure and pristine as possible. It may be a stretch of seashore or mountain, a prairie or (Please turn to page 134)

A Wine Drinker's Tour of Germany

By BARROWS MUSSEY

• For next fall I am going to wish for you exactly the vacation I would choose for myself—and have, annually, for over a decade. This is a wine tour of Germany, a pleasure open equally to young and old, male and female, beginner and veteran. It is not even limited to the rich, since it costs less, all told, than the same time spent in Paris or London. In fact, while the wine itself is not cheap (the cost of growing it runs much higher than for most French vintages), the restaurants and hotels along the way offer so much for so little that you can hardly do better on any European trip, short of hiking and staying at youth hostels.

Good German white wine never gives you a head; imbibed consistently for a week or two, it tones up the system and puts a sparkle in your eye. Nearly all the wine-growing regions, too, have at least one justly renowned inn where, along with memorable food, you may sample the best vintages of the region. It is the custom of the country to drink white wine with practically any dish (white meat or red) or all by itself as a treat or a midmorning refreshment. Some wines are too good to drink with food.

Most of the wine in Germany grows along extravagantly picturesque, steep-banked, winding, ancient rivers. There is almost always a castle, cathedral, or walled town at hand. In short, the trip would be a treat even without the wine.

As for the wine, this is the place to make a categorical statement, which you may agree with by the end of the tour, even if you don't now: The best German white wine is the best white wine there is. (I won't mention red wine, where France is undisputed king.) One more assertion, and we'll pass on to proof. There are more different, distinguishable white wines in Germany than in any comparable area in the world. Ten thousand at any given time is a conservative guess.

Distinguishable, take note, means that you or I can tell them apart as they stand side by side in glasses. Not Dr. Bassermann-Jordan himself could identify a hundredth of them blindfold; but he and we would say, "This one is sweeter; that one has more bouquet; the other has an acid after-taste." After a short course in label-reading, everyone who likes is automatically a German wine expert.

Label-reading is something of a science, because the German wine laws are the world's best and strictest, particularly about marking. (The Common Market may bring some changes here in a year or two.) Let me simply call to mind that a German label tells you: 1. The region where the wine was grown; 2. The year; 3. The town (usually with "er" added, as in New Yorker); 4. The individual vineyard or site; 5. The variety of grape (riesling, sylvaner, traminer, gewuerz or spicy traminer, rulaender are the chief ones); 6. Any special care taken in picking: Spätlese (late picking); Auslese (select picking of the ripest bunches of grapes), Beerenauslese (berry selection of individual grapes), Trockenbeerenauslese (berry selection of grapes attacked by the "noble mold" that sometimes eats away the skin and lets the water evaporate, leaving almost pure sugar); 7. The grower and/or the shipper.

Furthermore, the words Wachstum, Gewaechs, Kreszenz (all meaning growth), Kellerabfuellung, Kellerabzug (cellar bottling), and any combination with Natur or Original cannot be used on a wine that has been sugared; the special "pickings" cannot be used on wines that have been sugared or blended.

Let me observe further that Liebfraumilch is not a wine but a class of wines, legally defined as "good, sweet, Rhenish Hessian wine." In the German market, the name goes on bulk stuff the producer is slightly ashamed of. The same is true of wines bearing only a regional or town and a varietal name, such as Mosel-Riesling or Niersteiner Sylvaner. These are cooking blends.

After your travels have shown you which regions and which town and sites you prefer, the most enlightening information you can get is the name of the grower. Some growers' labels are a gilt-edged guarantee of quality, and a selection of names is given for each area described below. There are, of course, hundreds of other excellent growers; finding them is the same kind of fun that you have finding restaurants.

With a copy of Frank Schoonmaker's The Wines of Germany (New York, Hastings House) and an international driving license ($7.50 from the AAA) in your baggage, you can board the plane for Frankfurt on the Main.

If you are prudent, you will have reservations at the Frankfurter Hof, the Hessischer Hof, the Savigny, the Baseler Hof, or perhaps the Park Hotel, or the Intercontinental. While you are at it, you may as well have your travel agent arrange for a car. Either Metro (Avis) (Frankfurt address Niddastr. 46-48, phone 335454) or Selbstfahrer-Union (Hertz) (Schloss-Str. 34, phone 778296) will have a car waiting for you at the airport or at the hotel.

If you want something a little (Please turn to page 120)

John Browning exemplifies the dynamic young American pianists of today.

Why the World now looks to America for Concert Pianists

By ERICH LEINSDORF

For clear, fresh thinking on why young Americans so dominate the field, we asked the distinguished Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for an evaluation. This is his report

• When I was 17 years old, I stopped studying the piano as a means of working toward a musical career. My teacher, Paul Emerich, who now lives in New York, demanded an explanation of why I was stopping, when he had set such hopes in me as a future concert artist. I explained that I simply could not bear the hours of practice necessary in order to bring the stupid muscles of my hands up to the demands which the modern age required of the technical ability of the concert pianist. Little did I know at that time about the technical standards I would find 20 or 30 years later in the United States.

It had been, and still is, a constant source of wonder for me what these young people accomplish today. To be able to master the piano in this wizardly manner was considered entirely a monopoly of the prodigies from Eastern Europe. But now this has become the domain of a vast array of highly gifted, ambitious, and enormously hard-working young American pianists.

As recently as 30 years ago, almost every great pianist was European. Artur Rubinstein came from Poland, Artur Schnabel from Germany, Vladimir Horowitz from Russia, Myra Hess from England, and Rudolf Serkin from Czechoslovakia.

Several of these giants are still supreme, but as the years pass, they are succeeded more and more by Americans. European study is no longer a requisite for a concert pianist's career in the United States.

Dozens and dozens of the young Americans prove that we are approaching an American era in piano music. Many of these artists, all under 40 and some only about 20, have developed a brilliance of technique that still dazzles European concert-goers and critics while it is taken for granted as a necessity by American audiences.

Artur Rubinstein has stated in public that many of these young people are technically more accomplished than he. From his position at the absolute top, it would appear that Rubinstein can afford to make such statements, but it is also to be read with a thought for what is not said.

Whence this new wave of pianistic talent in America? Who are these young artists? What influence will they exert on the fabric of musical life here and abroad? And how may we hear what they are doing?

The new wave of pianistic talent is part of a general assertion of the American musical aptitude and ability. It seems, if I may for a moment indulge in posing as an expert in a number of sciences of which I know absolutely nothing, that the mixture of population and racial backgrounds which forms the American people is particularly beneficial to development of talent. The piano is the obvious instrument on which to start a child, and thus it would be very apparent, by the law of how much cream you get from milk, that the instrument which has the widest distribution would attract the greatest number of active practitioners, and from the greatest number of active practitioners would eventually come the largest number of talented performers.

The Twentieth Century has seen in the United States a vast growth of cultural pursuits, and the acquisitions of a piano and a record player have been the tangible tools which in turn have brought ideas of activity and competition into the heads of the young people. Technological advances increase leisure time, and people now have more freedom to seek the things in life which once had been the exclusive province of a small upper class.

At the turn of the century, American education meant basically the three R's. This changed rapidly; music crept into the curricula, and thus growing numbers of young people came into contact with music.

By 1964, more than 22 million Americans professed to be amateur pianists, in the estimation of the National Piano Manufacturers Association. Not unexpectedly, a sizable number of these, through personal desire or natural drifting on the wings of talent, came to a point where they wanted to compete for careers and fame on the professional level.

At the same time, music became more and more a part of American daily life through more orchestras, easy availability of phonograph records, and by way of radio and television.

These forces created greater audiences, and the cycle is being completed as the larger public demands and expects more and better music. One might (Please turn to page 130)

bigger than a Volkswagen, which is a bit cramped for touring, you can take an Opel Rekord. Ford Taunus, or VW 1500; bigger ones are the Opel Kapitaen, Admiral, Diplomat, and the various Mercedes models. American makes are available, but are too unwieldy for the narrow, winding roads. A sunroof is a treat in good weather.

Prices are standard: for Rekord, etc., five dollars per day, plus four cents per kilometer (⅝ mile), plus gas at about 60 cents a gallon.

At the blue-and-white BV-Aral filling stations you can get excellent Tour Maps of the Taunus (including Rheingau), Moselle, Black Forest (North and South), and Hohenlohe-Franconia. While the descriptive text is in German, the maps and illustrations are clear at a glance.

At least four of the wine regions can each be seen quite comfortably in one day's driving from Frankfurt. On the other hand, you may string two or three together, spending intervening nights on the road; or you can do it thoroughly, stopping at every good tavern or restaurant, and put in two or three weeks. If you have any luck with weather, they'll be among the most exciting weeks you've ever spent.

September is a good time; if you choose late October it will be chilly, but you can watch the whole process of the picking and pressing going on.

Rheingau

Closest to Frankfurt is the Rheingau (Rhine County). Outstanding growers are Staatsweingut (State Domain), Graf Eltz, Langwerth von Simmern, all in Eltville. Each, like most growers, has vineyard holdings in several towns: Prince Friedrich of Prussia, Schloss Reinhartshausen, Erbach; Graf von Schoenborn-Wiesentheid, Hattenheim; Graf Matuschka-Greiffenclau, Schloss Vollrads (Winkel); Prince Metternich, Schloss Johannisberg; Julius Wegeler's Heirs, Ruedesheim.

You drive through Wiesbaden to Eltville (snake through the one-way streets to the steamer landing, and admire Château Eltz and the other ancient buildings), and then down-Rhine as far, perhaps, as Assmannshausen. In between, or in some cases back in the hills to the right, are all the great wine towns of the region. Up in the hills, first, is Rauenthal (best vineyard sites, Baiken and Gehrn); then Kiedrich (Wasserrose, Sandgrub), and near that is Kloster Eberbach, a picturesque old monastery that now serves as cellars and wine auction room for the German State Domains (but beware of the restaurant). On the Rhine again is Erbach, whose Marcobrunn vineyard is among the most famous in the world; then comes Hattenheim, with the Steinberg section no less celebrated than Marcobrunn.

Your system in the Rheingau is to drive leisurely along, admiring the vineyard-clad hills and the old half-timbered houses, but not stopping until you reach Oestrich. Here you turn left through narrow, winding streets and emerge on the Rhine promenade in front of the Hotel Swan. Along with an excellent lunch, you will find at the Swan a wine list embracing all the towns you have left or are approaching.

Nothing is more exasperating to a man without a glass in his hand than professional descriptions of wine. Let me simply remark, therefore, that Rheingau wines are among the heavier German ones—not so dry as most (but drier than Rhenish Hessian growths)—and have a brisk tang of their own that you can easily learn to identify at the Swan in Oestrich but not by reading these lines. Incidentally, a small party can educate itself more widely by ordering a half-bottle, which holds about three glasses, and then working up the scale. All German wine lists are arranged in order of price, the least pretentious wines first and the Auslesen, etc., last. Don't go backward unless to compare particular vintages.

From Oestrich (Lenchen) we go on to Winkel (most famous sites, Schloss Vollrads and Winkeler Hasensprung). Back in the hills are two châteaus known in every corner of the wine-drinking world—Schloss Vollrads (belonging to Count Matuschka-Greiffenclau) and Schloss Johannisberg. Then comes Geisenheim, the home of the state wine-growing school and research institute (Geisenheimer Rothenberg and Mauerchen), and Ruedesheim, a weekend tourists' paradise (complete with souvenir booths) for a century and more, but also a great town for wine, Ruedesheimer Berg Rottland, Berg Bronnen, Berg Roseneck. There are about 25 famous sites, and the best have the peculiarity that they thrive in seasons too wet for greatness elsewhere.

As for the recent Rheingau vintages, 1959 was a great year all over Germany, both in quantity and quality; '60 brought an enormous vintage, of only moderate quality; '61, normal quantity, average quality; '62, normal quantity, quality good (with good growers and sites; the ordinary growths lacked sugar); '63, very large quantity (not as much as '60), quality poor except where picking was very late, then good average.

At Ruedesheim is an automobile ferry across the Rhine. Before taking it, you may want to go on to Assmannshausen. The village grows some red wine and some (rather ordinary) sparkling red; its fame rests wholly on one name, the Crown Hotel. This has been the mecca of German gourmets and Rhine-wine bibbers for over a century; it would certainly be included in any list of five outstanding German hotels. The cellars are famous, if not as strong on workaday vintages as the Swan at Oestrich.

And this is the end of the Rheingau. We turn back and take the ferry. Barely in sight downstream is the Mouse Tower, a medieval structure on an island, where a wicked bishop is alleged to have been devoured by rodents.

Bingen, a historic Rhine boatmen's and distillery town, stands at the confluence of the River Nahe and the Rhine. From it we can take off for any one of four wine-growing regions. Going north along the Rhine, we enter the Middle Rhine area, which has a few fine wines, a lot of commonplace ones, and a great many ruined castles. The Lorelei cliff, famous for Heine's poem and for Lorelei Lee, is here.

Nahe

I am never quite able to resist going up the Nahe. These wines are hard to find in America, and difficult even in Germany, where you can usually judge the quality by the price—if high, the bottle will be superb; if moderate, shun it. The growers are another key: Paul Anheuser, August Anheuser, (cousins of the St. Louis brewers) Graf von Plettenberg, all in Bad Kreuznach; Staatliche Weinbaudomaenen (State Domains), Schloss Boeckelheim.

And then on the left bank (the right as you go from the Rhine) is a well-hidden and delightful little hotel that exists solely to show the initiated what the Nahe can produce. In Bingen, turn left instead of taking the bridge to Bingerbrueck; then right across the Drusus Bridge, left along the stream, and so to a drab little place called Muenster-Sarmsheim. Just on the far edge the road forks; keep straight on for 20 yards, then right, up a climbing blind driveway with a sign: Hotel Trollmuehle. You can stay here for a pittance (each room with shower); the excellent kitchen is presided over by the proprietor's wife, Frau Wichert; but the wine list, confined solely to the Nahe, is unique. To begin with, there are half a dozen good growths "open" by the glass. Then comes a complete assortment of the outstanding towns and sites the whole length of the Nahe: Muensterer Dautenpflaenzer (grown not far from the hotel; there is another site directly under the windows), Langenlonsheimer Sonnenborn, Bretzenheimer Steinweg, Winzenheimer Rosenheck, Roxheimer Huettenberg, Kreuznacher Narrenkappe and Brueckes, Norheimer Kirschheck, Niederhaeuser Hermannshoehle, Schlossboeckelheimer Kupfergrube, Disibodenberger. There are many others, but too much for one sitting.

The Nahe itself is sightly, and its chief town, Bad Kreuznach, has great wines (very seldom in the taverns), Schneider camera lenses, and memories of Dr. Faustus (who taught there, but was born in a wine town in Wuerttemberg, and carried off by the devil from a still-surviving hotel in another, in Baden). But with so much still to see, and such an array of wines on the list at the Trollmuehle, probably you should stay right there. The prices, incidentally, stop almost where those at the Crown in Assmannshausen begin. If ever there was a special get-acquainted offer, this is it.

The Nahe wines are lighter, more delicate, drier than those you have been tasting in the Rheingau, not so dry as those you are about to try along the Moselle. They have a characteristic green color. If you ask me, I prefer a good Nahe to either a Rhine or a Moselle.

As for vintages, the Nahe shared amply in the great year '59; '60 was a bulk year, quality adequate, developed well; '61, smaller quantity, better quality; '62, about the same, outstanding bouquet; '63, large quantity, only the best of good average quality.

From Bingen we either return to Frankfurt via Mainz and the Rhine bridge or, if early in the day, turn left to Rhenish Hesse or half-right toward the Moselle. We will do the latter, since Rhenish Hesse is more accessible from Frankfurt by way of Mainz.

The Moselle

experiences the Continent has to offer. The river rises in France, and though some believe that Moselle wines are French, they are all German except a few unimportant ones from Luxembourg and a sour rosé from Metz.

Trier, seven miles from the Luxembourg frontier, was the capital of the Roman Empire under Constantine the Great, and it was near there that he saw the cross and skywriting. "In hoc signo vinces." Trier was also the birthplace of Karl Marx. Down toward Koblenz, where the Moselle (called the Mosel by the Germans, and henceforth in this article also) flows into the Rhine, is Castle Eltz, owned by the Eltz family (of Eltville) since its construction eight hundred years ago. It is the most remote and romantically situated castle in Germany, one of two in the entire Rhineland that survived the Middle Ages intact. To get there, leave the Mosel at Hatzenport, heading for Muenstermaifeld (fascinating 12th-century collegiate church); then to Wierschem; park your car at the chapel in the woods, and fifteen strenuous minutes on foot brings you out above the castle, which stands on a high cone in a round valley.

Between Trier and Eltz, the Mosel's almost perpendicular hillsides wind in tight curves that more than double the distance of fifty miles intervening.

Now, a very few of the myriad good growers: Bischoefliches Priesterseminar (a Catholic seminary), Vereinigte Hospitien, Reichsgraf von Kesselstatt, all in Trier; Freiherr von Schorlemer, Lieser; Thanisch, J. J. Pruem in Bernkastel; S. A. Pruem, Peter Pruem in Wehlen; Egon Mueller, Scharzhof (Wiltingen).

The really great wines come from within fifteen or twenty miles on each side of Bernkastel-Kues—Piesporter Lay, Brauneberger Juffer, Bernkasteler Doktor und Graben, Graacher Himmelreich, Wehlener Sonnenuhr, Erdener Treppchen, Uerziger Wuerzgarten. Bernkastel-Kues is one of the most completely satisfactory little towns in Europe—a tiny marketplace surrounded by tall, brightly painted, half-timbered houses, a ruined castle on a cliff behind, the river with its eel boats flowing swiftly through the middle. The road from Bingen, if you arrive that way, comes down the mountainside in breathtaking serpentines and everywhere are vineyards.

Furthermore, Bernkastel, alone on the Mosel (unless you name the Clauss-Feist, at Traben-Trarbach), has a really outstanding place to eat and drink. For your meal and your education in wines of the Central Mosel, there is only one choice: the Hotel Post. This is quite without atmosphere, unless perhaps that of a New Hampshire summer hotel. And there is no place in Europe that does better escargots (Did you know that a large share of the snails eaten in France are German imports?), smoked eel, or wild boar: no cellar with a better choice of Mosels, or a more learned host than Herr Roden to help you taste.

What you will taste is extremely dry, sometimes a bit acid, but with fine bouquet. Some Mosels have a tingle that survives the early youth of the wine. All the Mosel you will ever drink is pressed from Riesling grapes; the variation comes from the soil and from the amount of southern exposure the vineyard hillside has on the (appropriately) corkscrew course of the river. The years: 1959, great, as elsewhere; '60, as elsewhere, large volume and fair quality; '61, normal quantity, excellent quality; '62, normal quantity, good quality; '63, bumper crop, but too little sugar. If you want to spend the night at the Post, you will need reservations well in advance; your chances of a bed are better at the Roemischer Kaiser. The barnlike Three Kings is not recommended.

A town that ranks with Eltz and Bernkastel for ancient charm—it has served as location for more than one movie—is Beilstein, near Kochem.

You can go back to Frankfurt from most of these towns by way of the Hunsrueck Heights Road to Koblenz, and so along the Rhine, or across to Bad Kreuznach or Bingen. A satisfactory Mosel trip from Frankfurt really needs at least one night on the road.

Rhenish Hesse

Here is only an afternoon's excursion: Cross the Rhine at Mainz (on the way you pass through the rather attractive little town of Hochheim, from which comes the British name of "hock" for Rhine wine), and turn left, following signs for Worms. All the really first-rate wine towns are along the Rhine in a stretch of a dozen miles—Bodenheim (best sites Hoch, Kahlenberg), Nackenheim (Rothenberg), Nierstein (Rehbach, Auflangen, Hipping are the best of the 186 named vineyards), Oppenheim (Kreuz, Sacktraeger, Goldberg, Kroetenbrunnen), and Dienheim (Goldberg, Kroetenbrunnen).

Growers: Staatsweingueter Nackenheim, Nierstein, Oppenheim (State Estates; head office, Mainz); Franz Karl Schmitt, Freiherr Heyl zu Herrnsheim, Louis Guntrum, all in Nierstein.

Rhenish Hessian wines are softer and sweeter than any other German group—a good introduction for newcomers. Recent vintages: 1959, the great year; '60, large quantity, mediocre quality; '61, normal in quantity and quality; '62, average quantity, quality excellent; '63, big crop, poor quality except where picked late.

The towns (except Oppenheim) are rather grubby, and there is no memorable restaurant within thirty thirsty miles. The best way to do your field work is to make arrangements with one of the growers and shippers for a visit to the cellars. Probably the warmest welcome is to be found at Weingut Louis Guntrum in Nierstein. The senior partner, Hermann Guntrum, can charm the birds from the trees in English or French—even without a bottle of Oppenheimer Schuetzenhuette to help him.

The Palatinate

Here is grown more wine than in other German vineyard regions—the greater part almost unfit for human consumption; in fact, much of it goes into brandy and sekt, the German version of champagne. About in the middle of the Palatinate is a stretch five miles long, with six towns that produce white wines having no superiors and hardly any equals in the world. There are also four outstandingly good wine restaurants. Of the many fine growers, three are world-famous: Bassermann-Jordan and Reichsrat von Buhl, in Deidesheim; Buerklin-Wolf in Wachenheim.

In my experience you can just about cover the Palatinate, skipping a couple of restaurants, in one full day from Frankfurt. You can enjoy it in half a day, but you have to deny yourself a good deal. Go down the Autobahn toward Heidelberg. Shortly before Mannheim, a branch forks right for Kaiserslautern; take it. Once across the Rhine, use the second exit, at Gruenstadt, and turn left for Bad Duerkheim. This route is the upper end of the German Wine Road, and lies about an hour from Frankfurt.

Perhaps you will get to Herxheim in time for what the Germans call an "early cup" at the Honigsack restaurant (which is named after the best-known local vineyard). Don't be tempted by the menu, because it's not two miles to Kallstadt (Kobnert, Steinacker, Annaberg, Kreuz), where you must look sharp for the archway to Henninger's restaurant. Here, as everywhere else in today's run, you find a number of truly fine vintages available by the glass. Careful students mark the different glasses with lipstick. Then everyone has a sip of each.

Here you are sure to spot a Gewuerztraminer, which you must not fail to try. (Some good judges who don't like Alsatian Gewuerztraminer change their minds here.)

The Palatinate is the only corner of Germany that grows almonds and such near-tropical produce. The wine crops have been: 1959, great; '60, huge quantity of mediocre grade; '61, average quantity, below-average quality; '62, small quantity, good quality at the best growers, otherwise poor; '63, large volume, poor quality except in the best sites.

Henninger's spécialité de la maison is a local dish regrettably named Saumagen, sow's stomach, which gives you a pleasant surprise by tasting like very superior Philadelphia scrapple. The whole menu, in fact, is full of surprises, beginning with such food and drink as this in a village of 1,200 people.

If you lunch in Kallstadt, you must plan for supper in Bad Duerkheim, and as this is all of three and a half miles away, you need some wine-tasting to fill in. Between the two is Ungstein (Spielberg). Duerkheim itself is a watering place and the largest wine-growing community in Germany (Michelsberg, Spielberg, Hochbenn). The locals are proud of their red wine; you'll wonder why.

The vineyards from Herxheim to Duerkheim produce some great wines; from Duerkheim to Ruppertsberg, the great wines are simply miraculous. They are rich, fruity, strong, with a flowery bouquet, yet seldom very sweet even by German standards.

The first town now is Wachenheim (Geruempel, Goldbaechel, Luginsland). The two growers' cooperatives have their own restaurants; Schloss Wachenheim is among the best of the German sparkling wines, which can be better value than some champagne.

Forst (Kirchenstueck, Jesuitengarten, Ungeheuer) boasts even greater wines than Wachenheim. Heinrich Spindler, one of the big growers, has a wine tavern (closed Sundays) whose specialty is a "carrousel" of seven assorted wines in tiny glasses on a lazy Susan.

Deidesheim is a worthy neighbor (Hohenmorgen, Grainhuebel, Kieselberg, Leinhoehle). In the Kanne it has a once-famous wine restaurant that is not what it was, and Kern's Schlossgutsausschank (closed in winter), a most unusual little place that serves only the host's own excellent vintages.

Half a mile away is the last of the really great wine towns, Ruppertsberg (Gaisboehl, Spiess, Kreuz, Nussbien). It is the only one without a first-class place to try the local product; you do better to get this in Deidesheim or at supper in Bad Duerkheim.

As you come back to Duerkheim from the south, a sign points left to "Ortsteil Seebach." You go up the hill until another sign says "Kaesbuero." The Kaesbuero ("Cheese Office") in Seebach has been run by the Mayer family since 1638. An 18th-century Mayer, taking his chef's diploma in France, created the Cordon Bleu cutlet. The present Mayer has nearly thirty great wines on the list by the glass, including dry-berry selections. There are sixteen cheese dishes on the menu; the roast sausage is in a class by itself. It costs half what it would in an unpretentious New York restaurant.

The Main

Rather an acquired taste (and how one does acquire it!) is the wine of Franconia, grown along the river Main from about Wertheim to an area fifteen miles east of Wuerzburg. It is heavy, dry, a bit earthy, and the second sip is better than the first—a sort of trombone note among wines. The Franconian growers are inordinately proud of the flattened-disk bottle (the Bocksbeutel), which they alone in Germany are allowed to use. Leading producers are the Juliusspital (a Catholic charitable foundation), Wuerzburg; Bayerische Landesanstalt (State wine-growing school), Veitshoechheim; Prince Castell, Castell; Schloss Saaleck, Hammelburg; Ernst Gebhardt, Sommerhausen.

It so happens that the loop of the Main from Wuerzburg south, east, and north to Volkach is an almost unbroken chain of walled medieval towns such as you will find nowhere else in Europe. Only

TRADEMARK DESIGN TAKEN FROM TRANSACTIONS OF THE HISTORIC SOCIETY OF LANCASHIRE AND CHESHIRE

16th Century housewives trusted this mark

This is the mark of a salt processor in 1545. It not only meant quality but, as a personal symbol, it meant he stood behind the goods he sold.

Today's manufacturers use a modern symbol: Brand Names. These leadership products are found most everywhere, and you get the same quality no matter where or when you buy them. The manufacturer "goes on record" with his advertising. He sets a standard that he must live up to (or sales will suffer). Because he knows he can deliver what he says he can, he identifies himself with his products. Depend on Brand Names. When you buy Leadership Brands, you know you are getting your money's worth.

the best of the wines are great (and then I like them better than anything in the world except a few Palatinates), the rest almost undrinkable; but whatever the wine, the drive is a feast for the eyes.

From Frankfurt to Wuerzburg by Autobahn is thirty-five miles. If you have time, stop for a look at Castle Mespelbrunn, hidden in the beech forests east of Aschaffenburg. Though Wuerzburg was very badly damaged in the war, some of its baroque splendor has been restored. Above the town looms a monstrous ancient fortress, the historic Marienberg, and on the slopes are the famous sites of Stein, Leiste, Harfe, Neuberg. It is probably the only city equally famous for wine and beer. (They took to brewing when they ran out of wine in the Thirty Years' War.) The best wine-tasting place is the taproom of the Hotel Laemmle. Then there are two venerable charity foundations, the Juliusspital and the Buergerspital, which are large vineyard owners and have restaurants that serve their own vintages. Blaatze are crisp brown wafers the size of a dinner plate that are as insidious as peanuts.

The most picturesque stretch is along the Main above Wuerzburg—Randersacker (Pfuelben, Hohbug, Teufelskeller; along with Wuerzburg possibly the best growths of the Main), Eibelstadt (Altenberg), Sommerhausen (Steinbach; has a legitimate theater, seating about 30, in the city gate), Ochsenfurt (beer), Frickenhausen, Sulzfeld, Kitzingen, Dettelbach (still guarded by a 15th-century wall with thirty-six towers), Escherndorf (Lump, Eulengrube); then over the Main to Volkach (Ratsherr) and across country by Prichsenstadt, Castell (Schlossberg), and Roedelsee (Kuechenmeister) to Iphofen.

The wines of Iphofen (Julius-Echter-Berg, Kronsberg) are among the best known Franconian vintages, but I personally think them flat and uninspiring. The place is a must, however, both for its much-photographed town gates and for its outstanding country inn, the Zehntkeller. Give Franconia two days, and dine, drink, and sleep here.

Franconia usually suffers the worst of any German wine region from the whims of the weather. Fifty-nine was a great year; '60 had big volume, fair quality; '61, ordinary quantity, good average quality; '62, little and poor; '63, big volume, inferior quality.

The last two areas are for either very advanced or very casual winebibbers, because they are so large and offer so much besides vineyards, and their wines are rarely to be had except right on the spot.

Baden

Baden, especially, includes four subregions, strung out along the edge of the Black Forest from Baden Baden almost to Switzerland. If you are very determined and have a fast car, you can look at the more northerly two areas in one day from Frankfurt. For real pleasure, take at least three days.

The growers, especially in the Kaiserstuhl, include several cooperatives (Winzergenossenschaften); then there are Freiherr von Neveu and Graf Wolff-Metternich in Durbach; Hermann Ihringer, Achkarren; Rudolf Stigler and Gebr. Mueller in Ihringen. The Kaiserstuhl wines, outstandingly good and plentiful for their price, are gradually reaching America.

You begin with at least a lunch, if not overnight, at the Hotel Erbprinz in Ettlingen, near Karlsruhe. Here you find one of the best kitchens in northern Europe and a wine list whose many-sided excellence is possibly unrivaled; at any rate, nobody else offers such an array of the best from Baden. Sixteen miles southwest is the Adler, hidden on a back street in Rastatt. Just below Baden Baden, the vineyards begin. A hillside route called the Baden Wine Road has been marked out with green and yellow signs, and is heartily recommended for scenery and wine alike, though time may compel you to take the Autobahn part of the way. In Offenburg, the Hotel Sonne is nationally famous. The Ritter in Durbach, a few miles up-country, has excellent local growths.

Then comes a gap in the vineyards (not in the scenery), and finally the spire of Freiburg cathedral rises before you. Freiburg promptly wins all hearts with its Gothic minster and its backdrop of Black Forest mountains. Even more endearing to wine-seekers is a superb restaurant and hotel, the Falcon (Zum Falken), whose late owner, Hermann Ihringer, worked for Escoffier in New York. Furthermore, the hotel owns the best vineyards in possibly the best wine town of Baden, Achkarren. You can't decide whether kitchen or cellar is the more tempting.

Freiburg is the natural base for tours of the two neighboring Baden vineyard regions: the Markgraefler-land to the south, the Kaiserstuhl to the west. Generally speaking, the Kaiserstuhl (Emperor's Seat) (Achkarren, Bickensohl, Ihringen, Oberrotweil, Bischoffingen) grows much better wines than the Margrave's Land (Britzingen, Muellheim, Auggen), but the latter has more picturesque old towns. One specialty of both is rosé, called Weissherbst and made by pressing red Pinot Noir grapes immediately, as if they were white, instead of letting them stew in the pigmented juice of the red skins.

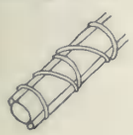
Swabia

Wuerttemberg is a land of thrift, hard work, and hidden assets. It grows three times as much wine as the Rheingau, nearly twice as much as the Nahe—and quietly drinks all of it up. You can hardly get a bottle of Wuerttemberger (or Swabian) outside the region itself at any price.

More open-handed growers are Graf Adelmann and Kleinbottwar; Lehrund Versuchsanstalt (State school), Weinsberg; Graf Neipperg, Schwaigern.

The Swabian countryside is the off-the-beaten-track tourist's dream, the one German region that can vie with Franconia for walled towns and castles, while the village-inn cookery is rather better.

Stuttgart is the main city of Swabia. On an afternoon's run through the neighboring Rems Valley, you can enjoy some of the loveliest scenery and the best wines (Stettener, Schnaiter, Kleinheppacher) in a region outstanding for both. North, around Heilbronn, grow the Fleiners, Weinsbergers, Loewensteiners, Beilsteiners. And the best place to drink them, with truly memorable accompanying cuisine, is at the Hotel Sonne-Post in the backwoods town of Murrhardt, twenty-odd miles northeast of Stuttgart. Due west of Heilbronn lies Schwaigern, where the Altes Rentamt of Count Neipperg has a national reputation for cellar and kitchen. I venture to stick up for the Sonne-Post, but the Altes Rentamt is easier to reach. Either will soon teach you the characteristics of outstanding Swabian wines better than any words could do.



To get back to Frankfurt with more than a full complement of old towns and castles crowning vineyards, just follow the Neckar river to Heidelberg. ■

THE BASIC FORMS FOR ARRANGING

How to Hold Flowers and Branches

The easiest way to hold flowers and branches in the containers is to use frogs. Some plants (like asparagus fern and small chrysanthemums) have too thin stems to stick in the pins of the frogs. In that case, cut larger, soft centered stems into short lengths (1½" or 2") and stick the thin stems into them. Even some large, thick stems are very soft and not capable of holding their own heavy flower heads (like calla). You can strengthen them by tying on small wood sticks (see top drawing).

Big woody and hard branches can be sharpened into a "V" shape so they will hold in a frog (bottom drawing).

Training

Most plants have some interesting lines or points. To find these best points is the basic attitude for flower arranging.

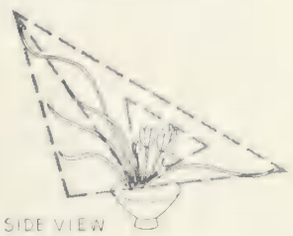
But sometimes, you need to strengthen, even exaggerate, these lines. To do this, grasp a branch or stem with the palms of your hands and slowly and gradually bend. For the hard and breakable wood branches (like pine and maple), gently repeat. Do not try to bend all at once.

For big branches, make 2 or 3 slits with scissors or a knife and then bend. For very big woody branches, squeeze small pieces of wood into the slits to keep them bent.

To change the direction of flowers and leaves, twist them with your fingers. Do it at 2 or 3 points. But don't forget that the lines you make should never look artificial, but should still look natural.

Trimming and Pruning

Trimming means to take out unnecessary flowers, leaves, and branches. It may be very difficult to make up your mind whether or not this is necessary. Also you may want to resist doing this because all are too lovely to cut.



You should be careful to avoid cutting out the necessary ones but you also have to decide bravely to cut out the unnecessary ones. Please be brave!

As shown by the drawing, above left, the stalks are thickly covered with flowers and leaves. When they were in the field, they were properly thick as seen against the vastness of nature which surrounded them. But when seen in the new environment of the room, they are obviously too heavy and thick.

The drawing next to it shows how differently the same stalks look after being cut. Their lines become clearer and the remaining few leaves set off the beauty of the flowers.

It is the purpose of trimming to make clear space which emphasizes lines and color much better than a cluttery massive jam. This is the same principle used in Japanese painting and sumi-e.

These five leaves and four flowers make lines stretching out in different directions in different shapes. Also they include the empty spaces and make intricate triangular shapes. That means lines are not only lines. They include empty spaces and the empty spaces help dramatize the flower material.

The spaces are included in height and depth as shown in the drawings of elevation and plan.

Again I say, these trimmed, cleaned lines and fewer flowers give a stronger impression and emphasize each other. They do not compete with or hide each other.

Balance

When we arrange flowers, the first flower defines the position, height, and shape of the second one. And the second one settles the third one. The third leads to the fourth. Thus, each one is not dependent or alone. They relate organically to each other and compose into a united harmony.

There are many elements in producing harmony: balance, ratio, and the angles of each flower.

Balance exists between heights of the branch and flower or between flower and flower, sizes of flowers, numbers of branches and flowers, and between flowers and the vase. Ratio between color of each flower or branch, or flower and green. These balances and ratios cannot be computed mathematically. Glossy, heavy leaves (like gum and magnolia) give stronger impressions than needle or matte leaves (like asparagus and maple) even though they have the same surfaces mathematically. Bright, strong colors (like red, yellow, orange) are more demanding than pale or dark colors (like lavender, dark green). Sharp clean shapes (like Easter lily and calla) are stronger than characterless shapes like asters. Globular shapes (like marigold or hydrangea) are stronger than the flat shape like cosmos.

Preservation and water-raising

It is natural to wish to keep flowers as long as possible after they are arranged. But the flowers have their own span of life, some longer than others. Even when they are in the fields, their lives are not too long.

To keep flowers fresh and pretty, it is necessary to help their water-raising power. This power differs by species. For instance, trees such as pine, cedar, cycad, magnolia preserve themselves much longer than the grasses. Flowers like lily, gladiolus, and carnation preserve very well. Wistaria, autumn leaves of Japanese maple, bamboo, pomegranate, lotus, begonia, bush clover water lily, thistle, rose and chrysanthemums—these trees and flowers need help raising their drinking water.

As you know, all vegetation is absorbing water constantly from the earth and evaporating it through its surfaces. Cut flowers continue operating this way.

Water is supplied from the vase for the cut flowers. But some weak ones are not strong enough to absorb enough by their own strength. Also, they often lose their water content by wind, just like laundry in windy air.

Another factor affecting the water content of vegetation is the season. Evaporation becomes more active when the temperature goes up. In summer you see the flowers and leaves droop in a hot midday and recover when the cool evening comes. Here are some helpful hints to insure long life for your flower arrangements:

1. The best time to cut flowers:

The best way to get flowers in good condition is to cut them from your own garden, if you are lucky enough to have a garden. They keep their freshness much longer than the ones you get from the florists. The best time of day to cut is early morning or evening after dark because they absorb water more actively when temperatures are lower. "Dew drops on the leaf-tip" is an expression that has often appeared in literature describing the essence of freshness. After very active water-absorbing during the night, water drops do come out on the leaves in early morning. This is proof that it is the best time to cut the flowers.

2. Cutting in water:

Best and easiest way to preserve the flowers is to cut off about 2 or 3 inches of the stems under water, the sooner the better. It renews the stems and gives them more strength to absorb water. Air sneaks into the stems after they are cut, interrupting the ability of drawing water. And often, some kind of bacteria gets in and causes decay to start at the cut stem. Also as arranged flowers get old, this cut-in-water method brings back their vitality for a little while longer.

3. Keep flowers away from wind:

Winds make flowers tire quickly. When you carry flowers, better protect them from winds, wrapping them with paper. Particularly, don't place an arrangement beside an open window in summer.

4. Soak in deep water:

The reason for soaking in deep water is to increase the water pressure which will facilitate the plant in drawing up water. Soak all living materials in deep water up to their throats for a couple of hours before arranging.

5. Water in the vases:

Keep water clean by changing it frequently. Put in a little bit of alum. It works to keep water clean and helps in water raising.

Spraying water on the flowers makes them look good for a moment. But it spoils the water-raising power of the flowers.

6. Chemical treatments:

The chemical treatments should be done after cutting the stems in water. For tree branches or hard-stemmed flowers (such as roses, wistaria) peel off the skin about 1 inch at the cut ends and split the cut ends into 2 to 3 sections. Soak in water to which has been added such chemicals as peppermint oil, alcohol, acetic acid, or diluted hydrochloric acid. (Use only one of these.)

Instead of soaking in such chemicals, wet a cotton ball with the chemical and insert it between the splits of the stem.

Smashing the cut ends is another way to help the stem to drink up the chemicals easier.

Salt is also used. Rub it on the cut ends.

Vinegar is used for dahlia and calla lily.

Other preserving systems:

A. BURNING METHOD

Burn the cut end of the stems with a fire. The flowers get nourishment by carbonization. This method is effective for trees and hard-stemmed flowers. After burning, put them into cold water immediately.

B. BOILING METHOD

This is mostly used for summer flowers. Boil the cut end for 1 to 2 minutes. If you add a small portion of alcohol, it is more effective. Be careful to avoid spoiling the leaves and flowers with steam. Wrap the whole flower except the cut ends with paper. Dip into cold water immediately.

C. LUKEWARM WATER METHOD

Wrap the whole flower with paper except the cut ends and soak the cut ends in lukewarm water for 30 to 60 minutes. This method is good for flowers coming from greenhouses in winter. ■ can forget the festive spectacle.

For that matter, any musical event in Vienna seems to be unforgettable, whether it's an opera in the beautifully restored gold and white Staatsoper (where the audience ceremoniously indulges in the Germanic formal promenade round and round a great hall during intermission) or a rollicking evening in the Heuriger or taverns in the Grinzing district of Vienna, where young and heady white wine is the specialty, dispensed from globular glass containers. Few cities have ever had more songs dedicated to them, so fervent community singing goes on, ending of course with Wien, Wien, nur du allein. Grinzing taverns are legion but we favored Poldi Kurz.

Other towns put up statues to military men. Vienna's heroes are musicians, celebrated in bronze and stone wherever you turn—Schubert, Mozart, Bruckner, of course, and judging by the plaques on buildings, Beethoven slept in more places than George Washington did. One of the most charming, fin de siècle statues is in the Stadtpark—the violin-playing waltz king, Johann Strauss, framed in a marble arch of Art Nouveau nymphs (see it on page 64).

The Stefanskirche, a 12th-century cathedral with a curiously checkered and dormered Gothic roof, is a sort of central orientation point for sight-seeing. But Vienna's most intriguing sight-seeing seems to us to be the Hofburg, the compound of court buildings which once housed the imperial Hapsburgs. Its wrought-iron gates almost symbolize Vienna. Hofburg is now primarily a set of museums, including the imperial apartments and the incredible jewels and cloths of gold of the Holy Roman Empire. Here is the chapel where, at 9:30 on Sunday mornings from mid-September through June, you may hear Mass sung in almost unearthly beauty by the Vienna Boys Choir. In this same compound is the Spanish Riding School, actually an enchanting little palace which is the showcase for the white Lipizzaner stallions. Certain Sundays of the year you may go after Mass to see these remarkable animals perform, or look in on their weekday training. Not, however, in April, May, July, and August. It's another of Vienna's musical delights to see horses dance to Mozart! Check in advance with the hotel concierge to get tickets for both of these memorable events.

Romantics, the history-minded, and home-conscious alike can't help but be enthralled by Schönbrunn, the imperial summer palace on the edge of the city. Elegant, rococo, it evokes memories of the great Maria Theresa and her ill-fated daughter, Marie Antoinette. Napoleon's young son, Prince of Rome and Duke of Reichstadt, died here. Franz Josef and Elizabeth and Crown Prince Rudolf lived here. All seem curiously close to anyone who feels the poignancy of their personal histories. Furniture, fabrics, and porcelains span the styles from 18th through early 20th Century, but there is probably nowhere in the world where you could see such magnificent examples of parquetry as Schönbrunn's fancifully patterned floors. The palace theater is still regularly used on summer week nights through August for Vienna Chamber Opera performances. You could make the place a full day's visit, including the coachhouse, zoo, and gardens.

Vienna is as long on museums as on music. Two musts are the Kunsthistorisches Museum, specially noted for its collection of Persian rugs and Breughels, sensibly made viewable from eight to ten Tuesday through Friday nights; and the Albertina, dedicated to graphic arts and a fine Dürer collection.

The town's latest showplace is its new hotel—the Vienna Intercontinental—which manages to fit right into the Viennese scene with its combination of gold leaf, crystal chandeliers and Gemütlichkeit, yet still makes aficionados of contemporary feel they've never been anywhere more up to date.

Other first class, more Old World, hotels are Sacher, Imperial, and Bristol.

Vienna is Eden for a Feinschmecker (gourmet). Lunch at a konditorei. Most unbelievable is Demels, 18 Kornmarkt, a sort of dark-paneled, high-ceilinged, imperial semi-cafeteria where you wander through choices of sandwiches, pastries, and candies, and the waitresses wear high-laced shoes. Dine at the Drei Husaren.

Expect no great bargains. The schilling is worth about four cents U.S. Antiques (especially jewelry), leather, toys, ski clothes, enamel, crystal, china, and exquisite petit point needlework are not cheap but excellent quality buys. ■

PEOPLE STOPPERS

When your car stops suddenly in a collision or emergency, the people inside keep going with tremendous force. What stops them? The windshield. Steering wheel. Dash. Too often with tragic results.

Or, seat belts stop people. Safely.

With a seat belt, when your car stops suddenly, you "stay put." You maintain a vital Margin of Safety between your body and serious injury.

The National Safety Council says that if everybody used seat belts, at least 5,000 lives could be saved a year . . . serious injuries reduced by one third.

Protect your loved ones and yourself. Install seat belts throughout your car . . . and buckle up for safety!

There's no long wait, no test-tube technique, no work, no waste, no after-meal cooking mess. Specialties of fine chefs can be turned out by bashful Blue Birds and lazy husbands. If they can read the labels, they can fix 'em. All you need are pans for soaking and cooking—and a good supply of clear water.

With all of this, there's bound to be a drawback—two of them, in fact. First, the freeze-drying machinery is rather expensive, so the products are expensive. But your needs may outweigh costs.

The second drawback is human. The products don't look particularly enticing. It takes a certain zestful flair to try anything so oddball. A sirloin steak can appear about as appetizing as a well-used car-wash sponge, or fish fillets can look like something left behind on the last high tide.

For ex-GI's still suffering trauma from mess-hall powdered eggs, it's only fair to admit that the spanking fresh, new-laid egg has yet to succumb wholly to freeze-drying. Powdered eggs still are powdered eggs—enormously improved over the lethal variety served in Korea, but still only an edible substitute that lacks the elusive quality of fresh eggs.

But the fairest verdict admits, "It's a matter of relativity. Eaten at Camp Muir at the ten-thousand-foot level on Mount Rainier, powdered eggs make an acceptable breakfast, especially when they're bolstered with freeze-dried cubed ham or bacon. And especially when you recall the smashed eggs that once congealed stickily between your shoulder blades as they dripped from a corner of your packboard."

Unless you're a confirmed hiker into wilderness, you cannot imagine the luxury of dining abundantly from exactly five ounces of backpacked weight. It makes for a certain openness of mind. Remember the early instant coffee that tottered on the brink of hemlock potion? Compare it to today's inexpensive, excellent instants and you get the general idea. Even the egg will fall before onslaught of all the scientific "eggheads" concentrating on its secrets.

The leader in AFD research is the Army Quartermaster Corps' Food & Container Institute, which has the most vital stake in its development. Food is a weapon of war. Freeze-drys are the closest approach yet to "pill meals." Treading on the heels of the military came concerns in the business solely of providing highly concentrated, lightweight foods in great variety for outdoorsmen.

Durable, waterproof pack on contoured aluminum frame weighs only 3 lbs. 12 oz. It can carry bowls (for soaking), pans, and enough freeze-dry foods for two people for seven days. Pack only, $28. Abercrombie & Fitch, N.Y.C.

Dri Lite's Spring 1964 mail-order form lists 71 items packed variously for crowds and individuals. And Stow-a-way has 96 items plus 12 complete menus. The objective no longer is the doughfoot, the high-lake fisherman and Alaska bush pilot. It's fifty million "instant housewives." Food processors can't miss. Competition will continue to improve the foods and bring down the prices—the one complaint of the avid users of freeze-drys.

The real point of the freeze-drys and concentrated foods is not convenience to the processor and distributor, no matter how great the savings in shipping costs, spoilage waste, and decreased use of ordinary shelf space. The real boons are for the consumer. The foods require no special care or refrigeration. Many taste really good. Since they weigh a ridiculous few ounces, they're the best thing that ever happened to a packboard and a family camp-out. Boating bugs have fallen upon them with glad shouts of joy, and car campers know their value on trips far removed from reliable sources of fresh food. The children's camp with packhorse supply line, the isolated vacationer, the big-game hunter, firewarden at a remote lookout, the scientist on expedition, all have learned their incomparable value.

Freeze-drys and concentrates make up an ideal survival food cache in the family bomb shelter, in a small sports plane, in the reserve lockers of the most elegant yachts, in the food box of a canoe or a lifeboat. They are fed to astronauts out of squeeze tubes. Foreign missionaries pack them along. Peace Corps volunteers sip crème de piments doux and velouté de bolets on the African veldt. Seismographic teams on the Arctic slope live on them for months on end.

Last summer the Connellys—husband Joe, son Joel, and I—conducted what may be called a prosaic test of the new foods on a 13,000-mile exploration of remote back roads in Canada. Admittedly, we entered into the experiment with considerable verve and some preconditioning. Ever since Lipton's first packaged soups in laminated polyethylene pouches, we have been enthusiasts.

We've hiked for amazing lengths of time in the Canadian Rockies on nothing but soup mixes, instant coffee, raisins, and a little hard cheese to chew at night. On the other hand, fine food is one of the pleasant things of our lives. We're a severe taste-test panel, always interested but ready to turn our collective thumb down. The Guide Michelin should be as tough as the Connellys!

Such shortcomings as still exist in the products were bound to show up. As with every other food, quality varies with brand, and even between items in a brand line. Outside of a dim view of green vegetables (starchy ones like corn and potatoes freeze-dry far better than green ones, which lose something that can only be termed freshness) and a few routine complaints on the matter of size of portions from a teenager with the appetite of a famished cormorant, the whole project was a rousing success. We figure that, considering our teenager, packages intended for four persons should feed any three people adequately.

There were even leftovers now and again, though these were inclined to be utility items, never main dishes. Things like chili and beans, creamed chicken with noodles, Spanish rice, steak dinners, chicken stew, cooked meat balls, pork-chop dinners, and unbelievably fresh-tasting shrimp and crab were lapped up with appreciation, and even relish.

WE'RE the living proof. After most of a summer on freeze-drys, we knew no weight loss, no hunger pangs, no adverse effect outside of a big yen for a great big crispy green salad. And plain vanilla ice cream, served by the soup plateful.

The foods become important in the kitchen only when they are improvements over available fresh products, or bring highly perishable regional delicacies to the nation's table. The best evidence that AFD's are here is that many of the country's most discerning restaurant chefs now prefer freeze-dried shrimps and Alaska king crabmeat to fresh, and certainly over the canned products. (HB's tasters certainly agree with Mrs. Connelly's report on shrimp and crab.)

Now distributed everywhere are Lipton's dehydrated soup mixes, Campbell's Red Kettle brand of enchanting little soup tins, Maggi's and Knorr's continental soups. They all lean heavily on freeze-drying to put tasty chunks of fresh mushrooms, chicken, beef, ham, and vegetables into wonderful broths.

FRENCH's has brought out a new line of dehydrated sauce mixes running full gamut from dark brown gravy to à la king. Libby has a dandy concentrated lemon juice powder. A whole slew of processors turn out excellent dehydrated potato products, the most adaptable of them standard mashed potatoes. There are instant puddings, instant rice, mushrooms, three-minute applesauce, instant cocoa mix, powdered skim milk, nondairy cream and buttermilk, instant freeze-dry tea and coffee (the latter is different from Nescafé), onion and parsley flakes, chives and shallots, dried grated cheese and casserole dishes.

But—procurement of a freeze-dried beefsteak and AFD mushrooms are poles apart. You have to go to a sporting-goods store for the steak, but the mushrooms are at the supermarket. What a mixed-up world!

As with any foods, there's plenty of room for experimentation with personal taste. The housewife may not have tried unbelievable combinations as yet, but they're old stuff to mountaineers. We once watched, wide-eyed with wonder, as a climber fortified himself from a packet of lightweight foods for an assault on the Grand Teton. Stirring up an instant chocolate pudding, he crumbled in a bacon bar, chomped his way solemnly through the mess, topped it off with four Metrecal wafers, and set off from Amphitheater Lake apparently in the pink of condition.

Many yachtsmen and vacationing homemakers know that one-pot dishes can be concocted out of almost any of the reconstituted soups used as the liquid for instant potatoes or instant rice. Or that Swedish meatballs, instantly prepared by placing in hot liquid, are delectable floated in instant beef soups. They've learned to use butter abundantly with freeze-dried meats, which are trimmed of fat and bone and inclined to be dry—common complaint with all fat-free entrée dishes. (Fat doesn't take to freeze-drying, refuses to keep indefinitely.) They know the virtues of dehydrated fruits added to cooked cereals, of cooked ground beef in the brown gravy mix, and AFD bananas in the applesauce. They've learned that mushroom soup and cream of leek soup with only half the recommended liquid are delightful sauces for poached Atlantic salmon and Pacific Northwest steelhead. They've found that bouillabaisse is perfectly possible on a beach picnic and curried shrimp definitely a cinch.

Just as frozen foods brought to our tables perishables once enjoyed only at the top of the growing season, freeze-drys hold the promise of instant abundance everywhere. Some peerers-into-the-future see an essential portion of the nutrition problems of a highly populated world solved by this breakthrough. Even now, undernourished children of backward nations are being restored to full health by the magic of inexpensive protein powders stirred into water. It's a heady thought!

In the past, the ephemeral goal of abundance was hindered not by inability to produce, but rather by the insolvable problems of safe storage and fast, cheap distribution. If food processors are relieved of the burdens of immense warehousing, of costly frozen-food storage, and the wastefulness of shipping the water content of foods, a better-fed world may be just around the corner in our time.

THIS tremendous thought was brought home to all of us who have friends who were in the earthquake and tidal-wave disaster area of Alaska this past spring. Invariably, when we asked these friends how we could help immediately, they replied by wire and letter:

"Send us cases of the dry soup mixes and powdered milk!"

They may not have realized it, but their requests were testimonials to a new concept of nutrition—food with its water content removed so deftly that the end product is as good as when it was fresh.

Below is a list of AFD processors and mail order companies selling such products.

Lipton, Maggi, Knorr, Campbell's Red Kettle, Wyler's: soups, available in almost all supermarkets.

Armour Star Lite: steaks, chops, dinners. Crushable, bulky, but certainly acceptable fare. At sporting-goods stores.

NEW LIGHTWEIGHT, PORTABLE OUTDOOR FOODS

Maxwell House Division of General Foods: A new freeze-dry coffee labelled Maxim. Looks somewhat like an instant coffee, but tastes like the best "perked" coffee. Spotty distribution now, but soon available nationally.

Armanino Chive Farms, San Francisco, Cal.: chopped chives, chopped shallots, chopped Italian parsley, diced red sweet peppers, diced Bell green peppers.

Wilson & Company, Inc.: meats precooked and to-be-cooked, and compact meat bars vacuum-packed in aluminum cans and vacuum-sealed foil. New are Wilson's dinners, ham and egg breakfasts, and shrimp. At sporting-goods stores.

Dri Lite, 8716 Santa Fe Ave., South Gate, California: general selection from soups to desserts, including main dishes, exceptional line of fruits. Available by mail order. Send for catalog. Their engaging motto: "May your heart be as light as your Dri Lite!"

Seidel's Trail Packet Foods: distributed by mail order by Ad Seidel & Son, Inc., Elk Grove Village, Illinois. Convenient line of dehydrates ranging from milk-shake mixes to hearty main dishes such as spaghetti dinner, Veg-A-Rice dinner, beef hash mix, western omelet. Designed for large-appetite outdoor males, not home consumption. Write for mail-order blank, or purchase at sporting-goods stores specializing in mountaineers' and campers' supplies.

Kamp Pack, put out by Bernard Food Industries, Inc., 217 N. Jefferson St., Chicago, Illinois; 1208 E. San Antonio, San Jose, California; and 152 W. 3rd, Vancouver, B.C., Canada. Standard, uninspired camp fare, not recommended for epicurean home use. Four-man packs of macaroni and cheese, Spanish rice, chili and beans, minestrone dinner, chicken pot pie, beef stew. Order by mail, or you may find Kamp Pack at local suppliers of campers' gear.

Stow-a-way, Cohasset, Massachusetts 02025: catalog of 96 separate food items and 12 complete menus packed together with all necessary adjuncts (like shortening and maple syrup). Send for their mail-order catalog.

Abercrombie & Fitch, Madison Ave. at 45th St., New York, N.Y. 10017: This famous sporting-goods house carries nine items from Armour's Star-Lite line. All nine are high-protein main-course dishes. Write for mail order catalog.

Many of the mail-order houses repack under their own label foods they buy in quantity from big processors who sell to Quartermaster Services and the restaurant trade. ■

almost say that this development builds American taste. Whether or not this taste is yet on a level with Europe is open to the most heated debates, but I think it is safe to say that American taste is certainly more widespread through the population spectrum than elsewhere.

I am sure of one comparative evaluation: The significant music critics in the United States exhibit far more discerning taste and a much greater incorruptible objectivity than most of their European colleagues. There was a time, of course, when European criticism was of considerable importance, but with the ultra-conservatism into which the great cosmopolitan centers such as Vienna, Milan, and Paris have fallen, with the virtual absence of any cultural center in Germany, the main emphasis today is on the musical criticism in England. I would say that between England and the United States, one finds the best taste and the most modern approaches to evaluating both the composition and the performance.

America has been an ideal stage for developed and recognized talent ever since cities existed. A great personage in Europe could come to this continent with full assurance of having total homage paid to his talent by the few thousands who were cultivated. Paderewski's successes on the stages of this country were never matched on the European continent.

Yet Europe continued to be the mother country of music—where most creative genius was born and where everybody went for study.

Then came the Nazis. Few men in history have done more to erase European leadership. As their military conquests spread across the face of the continent, an enormous number of people fled to America.

This influx of teachers, educators, instrumentalists, conductors, and soloists into the already swiftly developing musical life changed the shape of the musical map, placing America at the center.

Take the late Artur Schnabel. For many years, he was one of the leaders in Berlin's teeming music activity, teaching, lecturing, and performing as soloist and in chamber music. When he came to America, he followed the same pattern, teaching seminars at a number of universities, his master classes being attended by aspiring pianists who would have had to journey to Europe to gain much instruction prior to 1933.

The stage was set for the next act—the development of native American talent. It is not unusual that the piano became the most overt symbol. This is a country that puts much faith in technique, whether in tennis or in music.

The piano is an extrovert of musical instruments. It responds to a more aggressive musical nature than the French horn or the violin. The piano is the most mechanical among instruments. One knows what will come forth when a key is pressed down. Gratification for the piano player comes more readily as the response of the instrument is immediate and predictable, and it is fit for many purposes.

The piano is about the only instrument which is self-sufficient. It needs no accompaniment. It has a huge literature of music ranging the entire gamut of styles and difficulties; it can be used to accompany voice and to play chamber music. It is the most sought-after instrument as sure pastime entertainment. If you cannot afford to hire a band for a little dance, you take a piano player. If he is good, you do not even need a percussion section. In one word, the piano is not only an instrument in its own right, it is a maid of all work, and thus to study the piano offers numerous possibilities of utilizing the knowledge with nice results.

RESPONSIBLE individuals and organizations have fostered this growth of talent. Numerous prize competitions have sprung up around the nation. Orchestras have provided performance time for these young people—and even young audiences in special events. Recording companies have captured the best of this talent on discs for constant comparison.

A list of the younger pianists is impressive. Alphabetically, and picked at random, there are: Michel Bloch, John Browning, Richard Cass, Van Cliburn, Leon Fleisher, Malcolm Frager, Gary Graffman, Lorin Hollander, Byron Janis, Theodore Lettvin, Leonard Pennario, Susan Starr, Gary Towles, Ralph Votapek, and Andre Watts.

Today it is easy to compare artists via the phonograph record. Realistic piano sound has been captured, and further helps the popularity of piano music.

Recordings, of course, have given a new dimension to the whole picture. In practice, a recording on tape may be improved. Passages can be replayed and spliced in. The whole, when edited and properly balanced, becomes—alas—something of superhuman performance.

Pianists are thus challenged to outdo themselves in concert to match their well-known renditions on record. And other pianists, caught up in the competitive race for the top, must do the same.

It is a well-known story that a nameless European pianist arrived with a great reputation based on his records, so great that his debut recital was completely sold out—an unheard of event—but subsequently his live performances could by no means match his recordings, and after a short spell in the American sun, he has returned to his native habitat.

THESE young pianists and their highly developed technique will have great influence in shaping musical standards. Just as Liszt the virtuoso pianist influenced Liszt the composer to create works which no ordinary artist of the day could perform, so the pyrotechnic wizardry inspires composers of the mid-twentieth century.

Whenever there is an abundance of talented people, we face the problem of how to give them opportunities to be heard.

Most symphony orchestras have broadened their program of presenting young talent. Competition prizes usually entail performance with one or more orchestras.

Van Cliburn won the Dealy Prize, which meant a performance with the Dallas Symphony Orchestra. Subsequently, he won the Leventritt Prize and further performances. The Tchaikovsky Prize in Moscow catapulted him not only to international fame but also to a realization that he could help fellow pianists. He established his own piano competition, in which one of the initial winners, Ralph Votapek, is now well on his way to a brilliant career.

Malcolm Frager played for me at the home of Mrs. Leventritt in New York. The result of that particular audition was that Mr. Frager has appeared and will appear in Tanglewood with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The American stage demands dynamic, aggressive, and vigorous actors. Our system offers rewards to those who work hard and have talent. In the musical world, the piano currently is a major vehicle of success. But let us put technique in its proper proportion. Sheer virtuosity is not enough. Technique, formidable as it may be, is not an end unto itself but rather a means to a greater end.

Technical virtuosity is not necessarily conducive to sensitivity and musicianship. But these young Americans, having conquered the technical problems, are free to concentrate on the deeper and fuller meaning of the music they interpret.

We must consider ourselves fortunate in having such a wealth of young American pianists at hand. We owe it to ourselves to give them the opportunity to grow musically, and by so doing we can assure the continued leadership of this country in music.

Hear these superb American pianists in your own home

The records on the following list, selected by Mr. Leinsdorf, amply illustrate the virtuosity that has become typical of the finest young American pianists.

This is by no means meant to be a definitive list. It does, however, offer a dependable starting place.

a pond, a swamp, a meadow, a desert, a forest, or a cave. It's land on which nature takes its course, unprepossessing in size, sometimes, but always rich in life and the opportunities it offers simply to enjoy it as an amateur bird watcher or naturalist, or to study it as a serious biologist or geologist.

Nature Conservancy's role in this is to help localities acquire their own natural areas which are worthy of preservation and within close distance of their citizens. Out of annual membership dues of $5 ($200 for lifetime) and funds raised by donation and foundation support, the Conservancy makes grants and loans that permit the purchase of specially important sites. (The will of the conservationist-writer Rachel Carson, author of Silent Spring, named The Nature Conservancy to share as residuary legatee with the Sierra Club.) Grants are administered by local committees or, in some cases, by schools or colleges. It is one of the Conservancy's aims to turn the natural outdoors into a living textbook or research museum for young people and scientists. For more information about this program, write: The Nature Conservancy, 2039 K St., N.W., Washington, D.C.

There are something like 121 Nature Conservancy areas, from coast to coast, in 27 states. So they become wildernesses where you might escape for a day's visit with the world as nature intended it. Picnicking, hunting, and fishing are generally discouraged within the preserves themselves, and in some instances, especially where the preserve is used for serious study, visitors must request permission for admittance from the administrators.

A sobering thought to hold is that wherever you find natural areas preserved for the enjoyment and elucidation of the American public, they have usually resisted the bulldozer, the axe, the concrete fill, or the pollution of "civilized" wastes only because farsighted, conservation-minded individuals and organizations fought to protect them. There are many groups currently working for the preservation of our wilderness, but general concern has been shockingly eleventh-hour. The spread of ugliness on the American landscape and the reckless desecration of our resources have prompted Stewart Udall, Secretary of the Interior, to plead for greater public action in his recent book, The Quiet Crisis.

If you are intrigued by the wilderness and the possibilities of learning from and enjoying it, the following organizations will be of interest to you. Write them directly for information about their programs, all of which vary, although they share in common a dedication to the preservation of America's natural beauty and work actively to enlist the public's aid.

■ The Audubon Society, 1130 Fifth Ave., New York. This organization concerns itself primarily with bird life and the preservation of bird sanctuaries, and has frequently acquired land in cooperation with Nature Conservancy.

■ The Wilderness Society, 2144 P St., N.W., Washington, D.C., works to promote protective legislation for our wildernesses and puts on annual "A Way to the Wilderness" trail trips, available to its members, besides regular publication of wilderness news.

■ Sierra Club, 427 West Fifth St., Los Angeles, California, sponsors regular pack trips into wilderness and sponsors biennial Wilderness Conferences. Results of its 1963 meetings are published in book form in Tomorrow's Wilderness, available to members.

■ Appalachian Trail Conference, 1916 Sunderland Place, N.W., Washington, D.C., coordinates Appalachian-area hiking groups and concerns itself with maintaining trails in natural but safe condition.

■ National Wildlife Federation, 1412 16 St., N.W., Washington, D.C., is an educational organization devoted to promoting the understanding and preservation of all phases of wild life. ■

There's a quality about a home with Henredon

Some furniture merely furnishes a house. Henredon furniture does more. It creates an atmosphere in your home; expresses your very particular taste; reveals your knowledge of design and fine workmanship. Take the pieces shown from Henredon's Custom Folio Two. It's a collection for individualists. Motifs are varied, not matched from piece to piece. Finishes are combined Vintage Fruitwood with Sandstone. The sofa plays pattern i wood against pattern in fabric. Handsome cabinets provide th architectural excitement so many rooms lack today and, unlik built-ins, these units can be moved and rearranged as you pleas Henredon helps you plan ahead!). Here, then, is infinite variety or your decorating, yet everything lives together happily. That's the way Henredon designers design. That's why Henredon is noted for custom quality. You can see Henredon furniture in fine stores everywhere. And you'll enjoy the viewing!

if you don't want to jump all the way from Full-size to King-size

You'll land on our Queen-size. It has 20% more sleeping area than a Full-size mattress so two people can enjoy uncrowded comfort. And you may even use your present headboard or bed by adding a simple accessory. If you have the room, you may want to take the big jump to King-size. Here you can stretch out in real luxury. Whichever size you prefer, Spring Air's Back Supporter mattresses have the exclusive Karr Spring unit with "Health Center" feature. Available in foam rubber, too. Try a Back Supporter at your Spring Air dealer. Sizes are: Full 54″ x 74″; Queen 60″ x 80″; King 78″ x 80″.

BOOK-DIVIDENDS: The most economical system ever devised for building up a home library

THE OBVIOUS PURPOSE of this experimental membership is to have you discover, by experience, the extraordinary opportunity you will have as a member of the Book-of-the-Month Club to build a well-rounded home library at little cost—through the Club's unique Book-Dividend system. You will be in a position to acquire—as long as you choose to remain a member—other valuable sets, or expensive single volumes, all for trifling sums.

✶ YOU BEGIN AT ONCE AND THE SYSTEM IS SIMPLE • With each one of the three books you engage to buy during the trial, as well as with those you buy later, if you continue, you will receive a Book-Dividend Certificate. Each Certificate, together with a nominal sum, usually $1.00 or $1.50 — occasionally more for unusually expensive works — can be redeemed for a fine library volume of your choice. At present more than 100 different titles are available for this purpose.

✶ HOW CAN THIS BE DONE? The Club's Book-Dividend system actually is patterned upon the profit-sharing plan of [illegible]. A portion of the amount members pay for the books they buy is accumulated and invested in entire editions of valuable books and then through special contractual arrangements with the publishers in each case. These are the Club's Book-Dividends. Over the past thirty-odd years Club members have received through this Book-Dividend system—which lately has been widened and vastly improved—the staggering total of over $296,000,000 worth of books (retail value).

Kent-Coffey presents Perspecta, the furniture that has already opened more than 13,000 bedroom doors.

Perhaps when you were a child, bedroom doors were closed when company came. Now the Perspecta hostess ignores the hall closet and leads her guests to the bedroom with their coats. She knows it's her best opportunity to show off Perspecta—without seeming to. She knows you will yearn over the rich veneers from the wild heart of walnut, rubbed and waxed by Kent-Coffey craftsmen to stir their fire.

You'll love other Perspecta pieces too. Choose them from our color brochure that shows dozens of practical ideas in furniture arranging. Be pleased to write Dept. HB61, Lenoir, North Carolina.

KENT-COFFEY

She is fantastically proud of its Moorish arches in exotic rosewood that reclaim the ancient beauty of the curved line. She will point out that Perspecta legs flow from the case as though it were sculpture . . . and she'll show you every one of the twelve drawers in that legendary Quadruple Dresser. That's probably why, in the few months since Perspecta's introduction, more than 13,000 women have bought it.

who can decorate a room with trees, leaves, flowers and shrubs?

you can with PPG Gateway® II Sliding Glass Doors

Whether you're building a home or remodeling, it's hard to imagine a more dramatic wall. Its decor changes from season to season, always alive with the colors of growing things. Open, your PPG GATEWAY® II Sliding Glass Doors blend indoors and outdoors together.

The GATEWAY II door will deceive you. It looks expensive, but isn't. Sturdy, slim and handsome, it slides smoothly and quietly on sealed ball bearings and nylon wheels. Its flat safety threshold can't catch high heels. And the threshold design prevents rainwater from seeping in on your floors and carpets. The GATEWAY II is weathersealed throughout. The screen? Sturdy, non-corrosive fiber glass.

Safety bonus! You can get GATEWAY II doors with HERCULITE® K Tempered Safety Glass. Strong and tough, it provides full-time safety for the whole family. Comfort bonus! Cut heat loss in half with TWINDOW® Insulating Glass in your GATEWAY II doors.

Be sure to ask your architect or building contractor to include GATEWAY II Sliding Glass Doors in your plans. Or, for further information, write PPG, 632 Fort Duquesne Blvd., Pittsburgh, Pa.

Nature does the printing

Consider how many times you see the claim that imitation printed paneling in paper and plastic "looks like real wood."

Actually it never does.

No matter how ingenious, no printed copy can ever duplicate the individuality in color and grain pattern of Weyerhaeuser genuine hardwood paneling.

Our printing is done by nature, not by machine.

Weyerhaeuser paneling has a rich, lustrous finish usually found only in hand-crafted furniture. There's a wide choice of species and decorator tones. Some have the quiet elegance you want for a living room or dining room. Others enhance the casual informality of a brightly decorated family room.

And if you're concerned about maintenance, forget it. Hardwood simply wipes clean with a damp cloth.

For more information, see your Weyerhaeuser dealer or write us at Box B-11, Tacoma, Washington.

And this is only the beginning. The Family Book Service also broadens your viewpoint with thoughtful, easy-reading books about the forces that make our times . . . current events . . . successful community living . . . the topics that well-informed women are talking about. And, important to you, the Family Book Service also makes available wholesome, colorful storybooks for your children.

How the Family Book Service works

As a trial member, you will receive each month EDITORS' CHOICE which describes and illustrates the current selection and alternates. You may reject any selection simply by returning the form always provided. Family Book Service selections will be offered at specially reduced prices, usually at a discount of about 20% below regular publishers' prices, plus shipping. You need accept only four selections or alternates during the coming twelve months, after which you may resign at any time.

PLUS BONUS BOOK CERTIFICATES GIVEN AT ONCE

For every selection or alternate you buy — starting with your very first purchase — you receive FREE, one Bonus Book Certificate. You may exchange each of these certificates, together with a nominal sum — usually $1 — for a Bonus Book you choose from a large section of EDITORS' CHOICE.

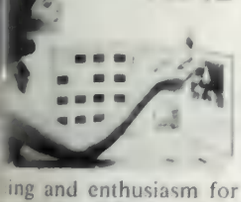
If — until today — your experience with art masterpieces has been limited, for the most part, to scaled-down "prints" and reproductions in books . . .



Imagine the excitement of viewing the world's great paintings in the FULL SIZE and GLOWING COLORS of the original canvases— on your own wall at home!

A REMARKABLE DEMONSTRATION OFFER FROM

McGRAW HILL Color Slide Program of Art Enjoyment

TAKE THIS ALBUM OF IMPRESSIONIST PAINTINGS FOR ONLY $1 [comparable value: $15 to $18]

HAVE you ever wondered why people who are otherwise well-informed often fail to develop a real understanding and enthusiasm for so many of the world's paintings? Perhaps it is because most of us only have the experience of standing before the original works of art.

Imagine then, what it would be like to view these treasured masterpieces in your own home — just as they appear in leading museums and in the collections of the world's great art patrons! This extraordinary experience is now open to you through a series of readable Albums offered to members of the McGraw-Hill Color Slide Program of Art Enjoyment. There has never been anything like it.

A new way to enjoy the world's great art

As a member of this Program, you will gaze in astonishment as Renoir's lovely "Seated Bather" (shown above) appears on your wall four feet high — aglow with the vibrant blues, reds, and greens of the Impressionist palette. You will thrill to Rembrandt's famed "Aristotle Contemplating the Bust of Homer," seen nearly five feet in height — and marvel as you view Titian's great allegorical masterpiece "Sacred and Profane Love" in its full eight-foot height — just as it appears in Rome's Borghese Gallery.

These are just a few of the scores of magnificent works which you will see projected in the actual size and full color of the original paintings.

Accept this $1 demonstration offer

If you mail the attached card, you will receive a unique Album containing 24 color slides of priceless works by Renoir, Monet, Degas, Pissarro, Cassatt, and other important Impressionist painters. These slides are produced in Florence to exacting specifications on 35mm Kodak film in individual 2 x 2 mounts. They set a new standard of faithfulness to the artists' originals, and can be used in any home slide projector. (If you do not own a projector, you may obtain one at very low cost with your trial Album. See special offer on this page.)

The color slides, however are only one part of this elaborate Album. Also included is a profusely illustrated 48-page book by Albert Châtelet, Director of France's renowned Lille Museum — with a fascinating guide to each of the slide pictures, as well as the complete story of the Impressionist era.

If this demonstration pleases you, you will be offered a new slide-and-commentary Album as issued, at two month intervals. Among the Albums planned in this series are Italian Renaissance Painting, with masterpieces by Leonardo da Vinci, Michelangelo, Raphael, Bellini, and others — The Golden Age of Spanish Painting, with works by El Greco, Velasquez and their contemporaries — The Post-Impressionists, including paintings by Van Gogh, Cezanne, Gauguin, and Toulouse-Lautrec — and Albums covering every other major art period.

Until today, slide-and-commentary art education was available only in museums or universities. Now, you can benefit from the same kind of expert guidance — and enjoy the world's great masterpieces with your family and invited guests — right in your own home.

The cost is surprisingly low

The least you might expect to pay for 24 color slides of comparable quality — if the subjects were available from museums and private collections — is $15 to $18. Yet, as a subscriber to this new Program, you pay only $7.95, plus a few cents shipping, for each complete Album — including slides and illustrated guide book. You may take as few as two Albums within a year, or as many as you wish.

Try the demonstration Album for 10 days

Send no money now. We will ship your introductory Color Slide Album of Impressionist Painting and enroll you as a trial subscriber. If you are thrilled with the demonstration and wish to continue with the Program, send only $1, plus a few cents shipping. Thereafter, you will be offered a new Album every two months at the subscribers' low price of only $7.95. If not delighted, however, you may return everything within 10 days, cancel your subscription, and owe nothing. Mail the attached card today.

IF YOU DO NOT HAVE A PROJECTOR:

What's so different about Centura tableware?

It's the first fine ceramic tableware without a breakage worry

CENTURA® tableware is for the woman who loves fine things, and wants to make them part of her daily living. It has the starshine brilliance, the look, the feel, even the "ring" of truly fine ceramic. Yet CENTURA tableware is so durable that Corning backs every piece with a three-year guarantee.

Now, from backyard barbecues to the most formal dinners, you'll use your CENTURA pieces with pride, without any fear of damage. They set a table of gracious elegance, then off they go—into and out of your dishwasher without chipping. Another advantage . . . the surface is so smooth, that even cooked-on crusts and residues wash off easily.

There are freeze/cook/serve pieces, coffeepots, all the accessories you want for a complete, coordinated set of CENTURA service. Choose yours from three distinct groups: brilliant basic white; the famous blue cornflower; the classic pewter gray.

Plates, cups, saucers and bowls are packed in groups of four. Coordinated accessories are available individually.

CENTURA service for four (four ten-inch plates, four bread-and-butter plates, four cups and saucers) in white, $23.75. In the pewter classic or blue cornflower, $25.75.

Corning guarantees that its dealers will replace any piece of CENTURA tableware that breaks, chips, cracks or crazes in normal household use within 3 years from the date of purchase. Pieces bearing this mark ✻ will be replaced if they ever break from temperature changes or extremes.

Find out all about CENTURA tableware at any better store. It's the ideal gift for brides, mothers, for everyone. It's the carefree way to bring new loveliness to your own family's dining—daily.

"It took just $850 and two days to air condition my entire home."

Mr. Clarence Tresler of Houston, Texas tells how easy and economical it is to enjoy the benefits of General Electric Central Air Conditioning.

"Many folks think that air conditioning a house takes lots of money and means your home is all torn up," says Mr. Tresler. "Actually, if you have forced-air heat like we do, the job can be simple and inexpensive." The Treslers' attractive home, at 3707 Broch Street in Houston, has five rooms, with two bedrooms, and 1450 square feet of living space.

"I'm in the refrigeration business," Mr. Tresler adds. "So when it came to central air conditioning, I chose General Electric, because it's reliable. In three years, our 2½-ton system hasn't needed one service call."

And from Mrs. Tresler, in her attractive paneled kitchen: "I practically never used to bake in the summer until we got G-E air conditioning. Now, I think nothing of it—even when it's hot and humid outside."

Mr. Tresler: "Two of the biggest things we've found about G.E. are even temperatures and operating economy. Our electric bills have averaged $25 a month. The central air conditioning cost as low as $12 a month."

Mrs. Tresler: "My drapes and everything else stay cleaner. I only have to have the drapes cleaned maybe once a year. And I only have to do a thorough house cleaning every two weeks or so at the most."

If you have forced-air heat, you, too, can enjoy G-E Central Air Conditioning at a very modest cost. Call your G-E dealer for a free survey and installation estimate, with no obligation. He'll also explain how you can finance the job on easy terms. He's listed in the Yellow Pages under "Air Conditioning Equipment."

Doing It Better

Tips on the latest in the care and feeding of houses by David X. Manners, House Beautiful's Building Editor

A swimming pool assembled from steel panels

• A new series of vinyl-liner pools by Cascade is bolted together out of galvanized steel panels. It makes installation fast, usually no more than three days. You just dig the hole, bolt the panels together, install the liner over a graded sand bottom, and the pool is ready to fill with water.

The panel construction makes possible a variety of curves and free-form shapes. You can get ovals up to 25′ by 44′. That size is about $4,000 installed, complete with filter and vacuuming equipment. Shown is the 18′ by 32′ kidney shape, 3′ to 8$\frac{2}{3}$′ deep. It's about $3,000 complete. If you want to have your handyman do the assembling, you can get complete kits and instructions for $1,000 less.

Vinyl-liner pools look like any other in-the-ground pool. They differ in that they owe their watertightness to a lining of tough vinyl plastic. Their shell can be of unconventional nonwatertight materials and construction. Their big advantage is ease of maintenance. You know how easy vinyl is to keep clean and new-looking. I've had a vinyl-liner pool for five years and I never have to spend over half an hour a week on it. It never has to be painted. In the Northeast, more vinyl-liner pools are now being installed than any other kind. Cascade Pools, Edison, N.J.

If you knew what the experts know about carpeting...

1 Every decorator knows that wool gives unlimited color range. Because wool akes color so easily. Got a ery definite idea in mind? ou'll find just what ou want in wool.

2 Every scientist knows that wool is resilient. Naturally curly. Test it: tep on it, press it down and ee how it bounces right back. eels good, doesn't it?

3 Every long-married homemaker knows that wool wears and wears. Because it has natural vitality and lively strength. Wool is permanently mothproofed, too. What a boon!

4 Every hostess knows that wool takes traffic in stride. Resists abrasion even on steps, in hallways. Keeps its springy pile for years.

5 Every cleaning expert knows wool makes the job easy. A small accident? Whoosh ... dirt lifts right out.

you'd always look for All Wool.

The words ALL WOOL assure you of every good benefit of good carpeting. Not just one or two. That's why you'll find ALL WOOL on the best carpeting in the world ... like Magee ... one of world's great quality brands. Handsome and incombustible

■ Celotex has a new acoustical tile, called Riviera, that's better-looking than most. Its deeply striated three-dimensional pattern gives it a pleasant texture. It also camouflages joint lines, so that the ceiling has an all-of-a-piece look instead of each 12″ by 12″ tile standing out separately.

The tiles won't burn. They're of mineral fiber. This is an especially good feature in a kitchen, where a grease fire on top of the stove can easily lick the ceiling. Acoustical tiles won't stop sound from penetrating a ceiling or wall, but they do hush sound within a room and soften clatter. As a sound-absorber Riviera tiles rate even better than most fiberboard ones. These washable and repaintable tiles absorb about 70 percent of all the sound striking them.

Riviera tiles retail at about 50 cents per square foot. On a typical 12′ by 15′ ceiling in good condition, they can be installed with adhesive for about 70 cents a square foot (labor and materials). Mechanically suspended, such as over open joists, labor and materials amount to about 80 cents a square foot. Sold at lumber and building supply dealers.

Light by the yard

■ Sylvania has a new electroluminescent tape which you can buy by the foot or yard. It plugs into ordinary electric outlets and gives off a glow like a panel night light. It has a lighted width of 1″, and comes in green, yellow, white, and blue. It is a flexible, thin plastic, and cool to the touch. A 100-foot length uses less current than a 100-watt bulb.

Commercially, it will be used for signs and highway markers. Around the house it can be used for decorative and safety lighting. I saw strips of it behind curtaining. The effect was similar to incandescent lighting and quite pleasant. It can be operated on a dimmer or by battery.

The tape gradually wears out by losing its brightness. After 3,500 hours it's only half as bright as new, but it's still effective for many hours after that. It's never bright enough to read by. "Tape-Lite" sells for $1 to $4 per foot, depending on quantity. Direct inquiries to Sylvania, 730 Third Ave., New York 17, New York.

Season a room with the spice-brown warmth of new persimmo

—it won't pucker your purse. It may smack of extravagance, but tasteful new Charter® persimmon paneling can be yours at moderate cost. Only $69.00 for a 12' x 8' wall. There's a casual elegance to this native American wood. It's accented with natural beauty marks—random flecks of brown and ebony, the nuggets of dark heartwood where the tree's branches once grew.

And it's finished to a silky luster by Weldwood's 18-step process—like a hand-rubbed fine furniture finish. For your most formal room, or your own private preserve, add a pinch of persimmon. Or consider walnut, pecan, Gothic oak, or any of more than 100 Weldwood® panelings (as low as $25.00 for a 12' x 8' wall). Look for the Weldwood name on the back of every panel.

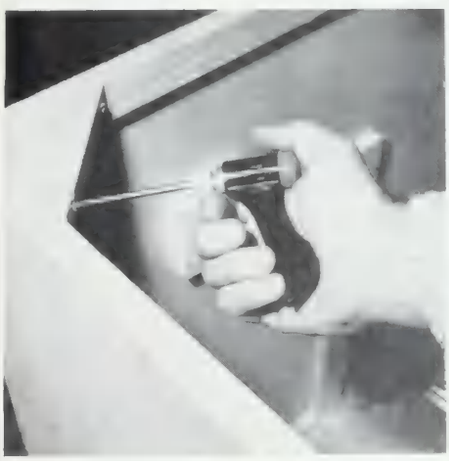
A screen for the garage



• Screened to keep out bugs and mosquitoes, a garage can have improved use for children's play or as a workshop area. On rainy days, the children can ride their wheeled toys here; on sunny days, it will be shady and cool. A garage interior may be cluttered and the floor stained, but the children won't mind. It's the change of scene that counts, and having a place where they can really cut loose.

This new fiber-glass screen rolls up into a metal housing on the outside of the garage door and doesn't interfere with the door's operation. It snaps to a snug fit on either side and has a bottom seal. It comes 7', 8', and 9' wide by 7' high, costs about $45. For a double garage, you can get two screens and join them by means of a special removable center post.

Available through distributors of Overhead Doors listed under "Doors—Overhead Type" in the phone book. Overhead Door Corp., Hartford City, Indiana.

An improved screwdriver

• Let's face it. A screwdriver handle is not the best design for gripping. It's hard on the hand, and you have to change your grip every time you make a quarter turn of the screw. The new screwdriver shown here overcomes both faults.

The pistol grip gives you a full handhold and far better leverage. The ratchet action means you don't have to release your grip or change the position of the driver in the screw slot. The handle itself clicks back and takes a new hold on the driver shaft. You can reverse the ratchet action for unscrewing, or lock the ratchet action and use the screwdriver without it.

This 4-piece set is a good one to have in the kitchen. It has two standard blades and a recess type. It sells for $1.98 at Hollis Co., 1133 Broadway, New York 10, N.Y. For workshop use, I'd recommend their 9-piece screwdriver kit, or their 13-piece screwdriver and socket set.

A Chinese potter's mark of confidence

Who was he? We only know that he made beautiful porcelain and stamped it with his mark—so that there would be no guessing—no mistakes. Buyers had confidence in his quality and craftsmanship. His mark was easy for them to identify.

Today, we, too, have identifying marks—Brand Names. Brand Names are the leadership products you know and trust; quality products you've depended on for years. They are found most everywhere, and you get the same quality no matter where or when you buy them. The manufacturer "goes on record" with his advertising which sets a standard that he must live up to (or his sales will suffer). Because he knows he can deliver what he says he can, he readily identifies himself with his products. When you buy Leadership Brands, you know you are getting your money's worth.

No home should be without one

■ In this age of toxic sprays and dusts, a spray mask is a necessity. The A-SA respirator shown here is designed for home use and provides protection against paint spray and vapor and against low-concentration insecticides. It isn't recommended for toxic agricultural and commercial chemicals. I have found it useful in dusty situations, such as when I'm sanding, and when I'm using odoriferous adhesives and solvents. I think you'll find it the most comfortable respirator you've ever worn. It doesn't make breathing a struggle.

The unit comes with three dust filters and one chemical cartridge. When the time comes to replace the dust filter and you see how much it kept out of your lungs, you'll be glad you wore it. The headband and nosepiece are adjustable. Sold for $3.98 by Willson Products Farm-Home-Shop, Madison 10, Wisconsin.

Safety from fire

■ Having a garden hose hooked up inside the house is important for fire protection. Most chemical fire extinguishers are for grease and electrical fires only. For all other fires you need water. Having a hose indoors means it's immediately accessible and also safe from possible freeze-ups. Utility room, basement, garage, and closet are good places for them.

Last fall a neighbor down the road installed such a hose in his pantry. He bought a wall-mount reel. It's a good type to have. Since the water runs through the reeled-up hose, the hose can be used without unreeling any more than you need. Wishfully thinking the hose he put on his reel would have little or no use, he bought a bargain plastic one, long enough to reach anywhere in the house.

Luckily, he checked on it during the winter. It had become so hard and springy it was unmanageable. If there had been a fire, he would have been in trouble. It was really my fault. I had warned him only against cheap, too-soft hose, which kinks. Now he has the same high-quality hose on his fire reel that he uses on his reels outdoors. Good half-inch rubber or plastic hose sells for about $5 for 50′.

The wall-mount reel illustrated holds up to 150′ of hose, costs about $10. It's made by O. Ames Co., Parkersburg, W. Va., and is sold at hardware and garden stores.

Sanding your floors

• I recently rented a sander to refinish my floors. If you have wood floors in such bad shape ordinary finishing methods can't restore them, sanding can be your answer. A beautiful floor may be hiding under all those layers of ancient varnish or paint.

The equipment I rented cost $6.50 a day and included a drum sander and a rotary edger. A charge of 85 cents for each sheet of sandpaper for the drum and 28 cents for each edger sheet ran the total bill up to $12. I did over 600 sq. ft. in the day, so the cost was about two cents a square foot.

The paint or hardware store where you rent the sander will provide an instruction booklet telling you all you need to know to do the job. Sanding a floor doesn't take much skill, but it does take some muscle. The big machine has a terrific pull. There is one important thing to remember. Keep moving. If you pause with the sander running, you'll leave gouge marks.

The sander has a vacuum that sucks up most of the dust, but there's still plenty. Stuff up all cracks around the room's doorways, or the dust will be all over the house. You'll have to clean up with your own vacuum before applying finish to the floors. Finishing should be done promptly, before the floor picks up any soil marks. This is a good warm-weather project—open windows will help.

Prefinished building materials

• Tedlar is a new plastic film that's being used on many things instead of paint. Its advantage is that it will stay new-looking for 15 years or more, perhaps as long as 25 years, even under severe weathering. It's been on test houses for over five years now without noticeable deterioration. It comes in many colors and in white.

You can't apply Tedlar film yourself. But manufacturers are putting it on plywood and aluminum siding, and on boards and batten strips, so that when you apply these materials on a house, it's paint-free into the indefinite future. They're also putting it on gutters and downspouts, roofing, windows, doors, reinforced plastics, and many other products.

Tedlar is made by DuPont and is a polyvinylfluoride film (PVF). It's cleanable with water, but it's so tough you can use kerosene, chemical cleaners, even paint remover on it without hurting it. It can be painted over if desired. Tedlar-finished products cost more initially, but less over the years. ■

Chickering
EST. 1823

It's only a matter of time. A hesitant waltz today . . . someday, perhaps, a stirring concerto. It takes a while to produce a fine pianist. Or a fine piano. Chickering, you see, has all the benefits of 150 years of development. The "overstrung scale" creates greater resonance and clarity . . ."free tone construction" eliminates distortion and muffling: two of many "firsts" that have made Chickering respected throughout the world. It's America's oldest and best loved piano—a proud possession to enrich the lives of all. For a fine piano, a family piano, choose Chickering.

SACK. Term used in Elizabethan England (also "Sherris Sack") to mean Sherry; literally, the verb sacar in Spanish means (among other things) "to transfer from one place or country to another," and a Vino de Saca then meant, and now means, a wine destined for export. "Dry Sack," however, is a brand of Sherry, a good quality Amoroso, put out by the house of Williams & Humbert.

SAINT AMOUR (Sant Ah-mour). Northernmost of the important wine-producing communes of the Beaujolais, and officially ranked as one of the nine best. It is directly northeast of Julienas, and its full name is Saint-Amour-Bellevue (it should not, of course, be confused with the town of St. Amour, off east in the département of the Jura). Its wine is popular, perhaps partially on account of its romantic name, but on the whole it deserves its rank and its fame: it is a fruity, tender red wine, soon ready.

SAINT-EMILION (Sant A-me-lee-awn). Ancient and wonderfully picturesque little town, rich in ruins and medieval buildings, set on the edge of an escarpment overlooking the green Dordogne Valley, some twenty miles east of Bordeaux. It was already famous for its wines in the Fourth Century, and, with 16,000 acres of wines, it district produces more superior wine today than any other division of the Bordeaux Country. Most of the best vineyards are in the township of St. Emilion itself, but seven adjoining communes are also entitled to the appellation, and five more areas, or communes, plus a portion of a sixth, may add the words "St. Emilion" to their own name on wine labels, as Lussac-St. Emilion, etc. The finest wines come either from the steep, chalky slopes of the escarpment itself (vins des côtes), or from the high, gravelly plateau behind (vins des graves or Graves-St. Emilion). Among the former, Chateaux Ausone, Bélair, Magdelaine, Canon, Clos Fourtet, Beauséjour, La Gaffliére-Naudes, are perhaps the most famous, with at least thirty or forty others deserving almost equal rank. Of the latter, Chateau Cheval Blanc is easily first, with Chateaux Figeac, Croque-Michotte, Corbin, etc., not too far behind.

District wines labeled "St. Emilion" often come from the seven additional, less distinguished townships, (Saint-Christophe-des-Bardes, Saint-Etienne-de-Lisse, Saint-Hippolyte, Saint-Laurent-des-Combes, Saint-Pey-d'Armens, Saint-Sulpice-de-Faleyrens and Vignonet), but even these have a relatively high average quality—they are sturdy, warm, generous, wholly agreeable Clarets, pleasing even when young, and attractive even when not "great"; they have been called "the Burgundies of the Bordeaux Country." The great chateau-bottlings are, of course, of a far higher class and are by no means inferior to the great Médocs, although their character is quite different.

Wines from the secondary, nearby townships have less breed, and occasionally a goût de terroir, or taste of heavy soil, but they are generally inexpensive and often good values. The six appellations involved are as follows, and they rank approximately in this order of quality: Saint-Georges St. Emilion, Montagne-St. Emilion, Lussac-St. Emilion, Puisseguin-St. Emilion, Parsac-St. Emilion, Sables-St. Emilion. A little white wine is produced, but is not entitled to any of these names.

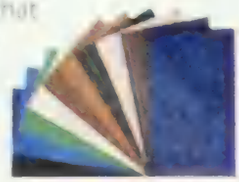
Also, the name is given to the Ugni Blanc or Trebbiano variety of grape in the Cognac Country of France. Here, known as the St. Emilion, it has almost entirely replaced the somewhat finer Folle Blanche in the making of wine for distillation—it is productive, and yields exactly what is required, a wine low in alcohol and very high in acid. It apparently reached Cognac by way of St. Emilion where, although white, it was planted to some extent in the red-wine vineyards. Late maturing, picked when not yet ripe, its grapes supplied a welcome additional acidity to the Cabernets and Merlots in great years.

SAINT-ESTÈPHE (Sant Eas-teff). Northernmost of the major wine-producing townships of the Haut-Médoc, directly adjoining Pauillac. Its best wines (Chateaux Cos d'Estournel, Calon-Ségur, Montrose, etc.) are sturdy, full-bodied, generous, and attractive. They have perhaps less finesse and breed than comparable Clarets from Margaux, St. Julien, and Pauillac, but a sort of forthright, lusty charm instead, which renders them most agreeable. There are many excellent lesser vineyards, crus bourgeois and the like, and regional wines labeled "St. Estèphe" are generally good value, although occasionally a bit on the heavy side, and sometimes slightly earthy.

SAINT-GEORGES. Chateau (Sant-Shortj). The largest vineyard and on the whole the best of the little district known as Saint-Georges-Saint-Emilion. Its average annual production is not far from 30,000 cases, a figure unsurpassed and indeed unequaled by any other chateau in the Bordeaux Country. In quality it is both dependable and good.

SAINT-JULIEN (Sant-Shoe-lee-an). Township in the very center and heart of the Haut-Médoc. Its wines include none of the very highest rank, but practically no poor ones either, and when sold simply as "St. Julien," they are almost invariably the most expensive of the Bordeaux regionals. Sometimes called the perfect Claret for Claret-lovers, St. Julien is a little fuller than Margaux, generally has more finesse and bouquet than St. Estèphe, matures sooner than Pauillac. The more famous Chateaux include: Léoville-Poyferré, Léoville-Barton, Léoville-Las-Cases, Gruaud-Larose, Ducru-Beaucaillou, Beychevelle, Talbot, etc.

SAINT-PIERRE-BONTEMPS. Chateau (Sant-Pea-air-Bawn-tawn). Good Fourth Classed Growth of St. Julien, producing a sound, well-balanced Claret, especially popular in Belgium and in England. It has recently been reunited with its twin and neighbor, Chateau Saint-Pierre-Sevaistre, and the property's total output, under two labels, is in the neighborhood of 10,000 cases a year.



SAN BENITO. County and wine-producing district in California, properly considered one of the "North Coast Countries," although not actually on the Pacific. It lies directly east or inland from Monterey Bay, and the vineyards on the steep hillsides and in the high valleys of its southern half are among the best and coolest of the state. Its total acreage of superior wine grapes has increased substantially in the past few years (largely as a result of Almadén's new plantings at Paicines), and the relative importance of these is certain to increase as housing developments and subdivisions surround and finally overwhelm what were, only a few years ago, some of the best vineyards of the Livermore and Santa Clara valleys. More than half of San Benito's vines are choice French and German varieties—Chardonnay, Pinot Noir, Cabernet, Gewurztraminer, etc.—planted on their own roots and ungrafted. This bold experiment seems so far entirely successful, and the predictions of the late, great Professor Bioletti, who foresaw a remarkable viticultural future for San Benito County, seems likely to be fulfilled. Most of the vineyards are in the high country south of the town of Hollister and of San Juan Bautista, which was one of the original Spanish missions, just over a hundred miles due south of San Francisco.

SANCERRE (Sawn-sair). Picturesque hill town, overlooking the upper Loire, in central France; its white wine, pale, fresh, with considerable breed and an engaging fruitiness and bouquet, greatly resembling the nearby Pouilly-Fumé and made from the same grape, the Sauvignon Blanc. Perhaps on the whole even shorter-lived than Pouilly-Fumé and sooner ready. Sancerre is a great favorite in Paris restaurants and at its best is certainly one of the most agreeable of the lesser white wines of France. The best of it comes, not from the township of Sancerre, but from surrounding villages, of which Amigny, Bué, Champtin, Chavignol, Reigny, and Verdigny are especially noteworthy. The total production varies greatly from year to year, but the average is not far from 200,000 gallons. A little excellent rosé is produced in the district from the Pinot Noir, and some experts consider it the best rosé of France.

SANDUSKY. Town on Lake Erie between Cleveland and Toledo. Formerly a center of Ohio wine production, thanks to the vineyards nearby and on the Lake Erie islands.

SANGRÍA (Sahn-gree-ah). Refreshing sort of wine punch, popular in Spain in warm weather. Its usual ingredients are red wine, lemon juice, sugar, water or soda water, and sometimes berries or sliced fruit and various flavorings.

SANTA CLARA. Valley and county at the southern end of San Francisco Bay, taking its name from the old Spanish mission in what is now the town of Santa Clara, near San José. Until not long ago, most of the valley floor was planted in walnuts and prune orchards, and many of the foothills to the east and west were covered with vineyards. As a result of the recent, astonishing increase in population in this part of California, most of these are tending to disappear, and housing developments are taking their place. A number of leading producers (notably Almadén and Paul Masson) have been forced to plant new vineyards in less populous districts further south, and others have simply ceased to exist. There remains the Novitiate of Los Gatos (a Catholic school), San Martin (with a plant in San José and vines near Gilroy), a small portion of the original Almadén vineyard, and a few others of less consequence. At the present rate, Santa Clara's great and well-deserved reputation as a fine wine-producing county will soon be a matter of history.

SANTA CRUZ. One of California's "North Coast Counties," although never very important as far as wine was concerned. It lies along the Pacific, some 50 to 80 miles south of San Francisco, and directly west of Santa Clara. It is considerably more famous today for its redwood groves and summer resorts than for its vineyards, only a few of which are still in production. Hallcrest, near Felton, is perhaps the best.

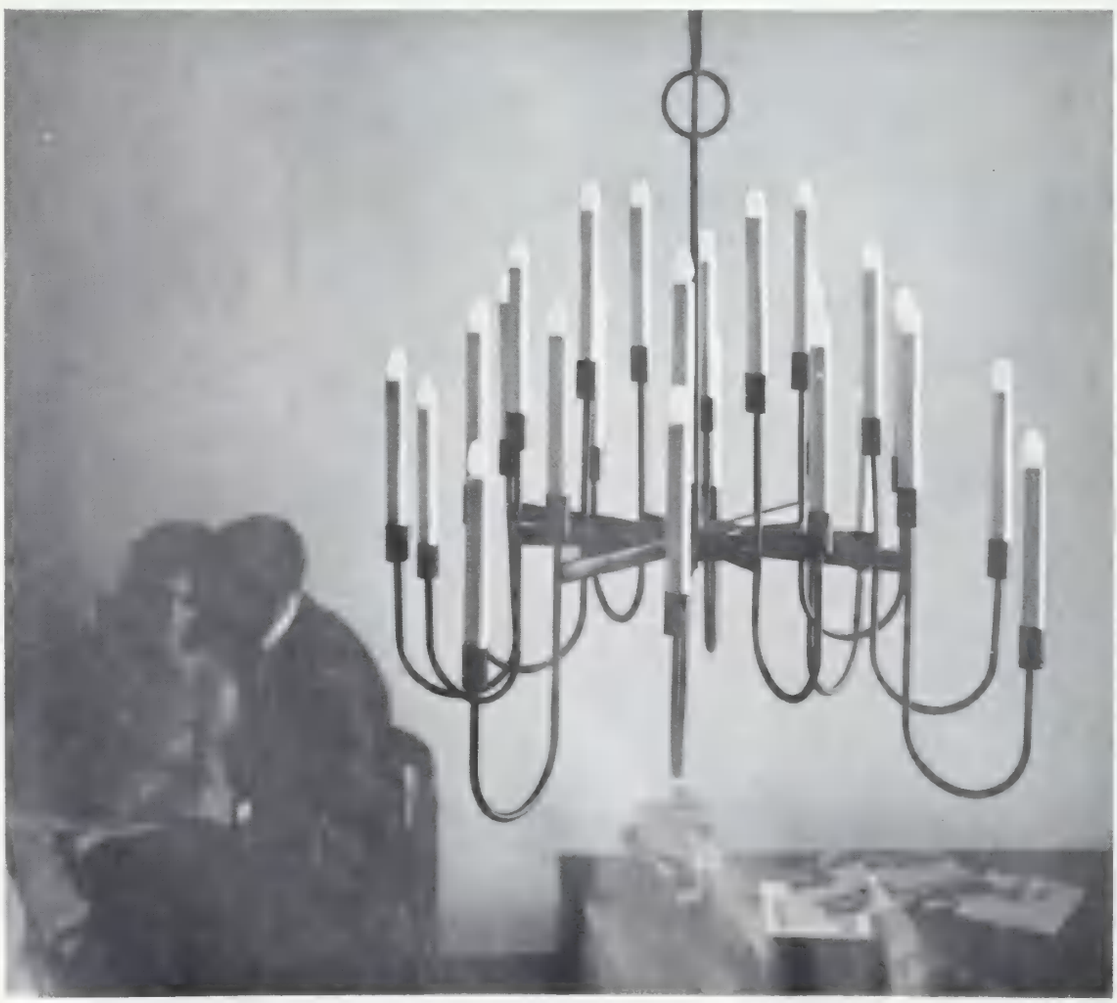
SANTENAY (Sawn't-nay). Southernmost village of the Côte d'Or, in Burgundy. Some very acceptable dry white wines are made from the Chardonnay grape, and others (less good) from the Pinot Blanc; the reds are better. These resemble somewhat the red wines of Chassagne-Montrachet nearby, being rather full and soft, yet with a good deal of tannin and occasionally an earthy taste, or goût de terroir. Not too expensive, they are often excellent values. The best vineyard is Graviéres.



SARMENT (Sahr-mawn). French for "cane," the mature shoot of a vine, such as those that bear fruit and are pruned during the dormant season.

SAUMUR (So-muhr). Major wine-producing area along the south or left bank of the Loire River, in France, technically part of the province of Anjou although most of its wines resemble rather more those of the adjoining province of Touraine. Saumur itself is an attractive river town, with an old chateau and a famed cavalry school. The best vineyards are south and southeast of the town, and the total production of the delimited zone is not far from two million gallons. Considerably more than half of this is white wine, made from the Chenin Blanc grape; the rest is vin rosé and red wine, both of better-than-average quality and both made from the Cabernet Franc. The more productive and inferior grape varieties are hardly grown at all and no wine from them is entitled to the appellations Saumur or Coteaux de Saumur. A very substantial amount of sparkling wine is made, both of the above grape varieties being used, and is sold in France and to the export trade as Sparkling Saumur, or Saumur Mousseux. The still white wines are generally dryer than those from the western part of Anjou, yet with a trace of sweetness. The best of them come from the villages of Montsoreau, Brezé, Bizay, Parnay, St. Cyr, Dampierre, Turquant, Varrains, Epieds, and Saix; they improve greatly in bottle and are surprisingly long-lived. The rosés are made entirely from the Cabernet Franc grape, and are often too pale, being almost white wines to the eye as well as to the palate, though of good quality. The reds, also from the Cabernet Franc, are somewhat more uneven, but those of good vintage years can be surprisingly fine, somewhere between a Médoc and a Chinon in character, especially those from the village of Champigny.

SAUTERNES (Saw-tairn). Originally and properly the name of a little French village, set down in a district of vine-covered hillsides some 30 miles south of Bordeaux. The officially delimited Sauternes zone comprises five townships, Preignac, Bommes, Fargues, Barsac, and Sauternes itself, and the total annual production hardly exceeds 300,000 cases. No wine of other origin may legally be sold as Sauternes in France or in most other countries, the United States being, of course, an exception.

True Sauternes (note the final s, even in the singular) is a rich, golden wine, high in alcohol (often over 14 percent) and decidedly sweet; there is no such thing as a "Dry Sauternes" from France. The finest Sauternes are all sold under the names of specific chateaux, and are chateau-bottled. The leading vineyards include Chateau d'Yquem (a true grand seigneur, and in a class apart), then Chateaux La Tour-Blanche, Lafaurie-Peyraguey, Haut-Peyraguey, Rayne-Vigneau, Suduiraut, Coutet, Climens, Guiraud, Rieussec, Rabaud-Sigalas, Rabaud-Promis, etc. The grapes grown are the Semillon and Sauvignon Blanc, plus a small amount of Muscadella; these are picked late, in a series of harvestings, when they are not only ripe but over-ripe, and when their juice has been further concentrated by the action of a beneficent mold, the so-called "Pourriture noble," botrytis cinerea. As a result, Sauternes are among the sweetest of all natural wines, and should properly be described as natural

Allen tone lasts...long after the novelty of owning an organ has worn off

(You won't be looking around for a 'better' instrument!)

When you own an Allen, you cannot rade up—you are at the top.

The reason is Allen tone—the most mportant feature in our organ.

Some organs get attention by put- ing special emphasis on extras. Zany tops, console gadgets, trick sound effects. Or even free organ lessons.

Allen has these things. But only Allen has the unique tone that comes first. It comes from finer tonal design and more sensitive craftsmanship.

Natural organ sound. Lifelike orchestral effects. Thrilling ensemble sound. Dynamic range. Versatility.

What Allen does it does supremely well. So well that famous organists and symphony orchestras have paid tribute to it alone, among electronic organs.

Sound effects? Yes, you can get them in an Allen. More lifelike effects because of Allen's lifelike tone—Carillon, Xylophone, patented Chiff, Chinese Block, Traps, etc.

But you don't buy an Allen for sound effects. They come with it.* You buy an Allen for its tone. A tone that makes every note, every melody, solo passage or ensemble effect more thrilling and real than any electronic organ you can name.

Listen to an Allen for the proof. If an Allen dealer isn't close by, ask a church organist about the Allen's reputation for producing the finest tone. Also send for interesting free literature that will show you how the Allen is different . . . no, superior.

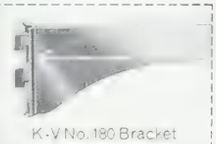
When you run into a blank wall...



make it beautiful and useful with K-V adjustable shelf hardware!

So easy to install—just a screwdriver is all you need! Such an easy way to put blank walls to use—beautifully! Inexpensively, too. K-V No. 80 Standards and No. 180 Brackets assure sturdy, no-wobble, no-sag shelving. Standards from 18" to 144", have 1" adjustment slots to make rearranging simple and quick. Brackets from 4" to 20". Three decorator finishes: Satin Anochrome, Satin Brass and Ebony.

Exclusive!

K-V No. 180 Bracket

Just tap down the bracket and the tension extends the full length of the backplate to grip forever if you want it to. Yet one light upward tap and the bracket is out for shelf adjustment! So new, it's patented!

Visit your hardware store or building supply dealer, and see his colorful K-V adjustable shelf hardware display. You'll find a complete selection of standards and brackets for any shelf arrangement. Be sure to pick up our free booklet on shelving ideas.

dessert wines. At their best they are quite extraordinary, velvety, and almost creamy despite their strength, remarkable for their fruit, their breed, and their bouquet. The term Haut-Sauternes is a trade designation, generally applied to Sauternes that are particularly sweet, but it has no official meaning, and legally any wine that can be called Sauternes may also be sold as Haut-Sauternes.

In California and generally in the United States, the name "Sauterne" (without the final "s") has practically become a synonym for white wine. Legally, it can be made from any and all varieties of grapes, grown no matter where. It is usually dry, and bears little or no resemblance to the French original: it must, however, carry an indication of its American origin in easily readable type on its front label. Many less scrupulous American producers bottle the same wine under the name "Chablis" and "Sauterne," which practice, of course, would be unthinkable and highly illegal in France. The nearest American equivalents of French Sauternes are considerably drier than the French and are usually sold, not under the passepartout name but as Semillon or Sauvignon Blanc, after the grapes out of which they are made. There are a few American sweet Sauternes, but these are made by a process altogether different from that prevailing in the true Sauternes country of France.

SAUVIGNON or SAUVIGNON BLANC (So-veen-yawn). Splendid white wine grape, perhaps surpassed in quality, among the world's known varieties, only by the Chardonnay and the true Riesling. In the Bordeaux Country, it is the leading variety of Graves and, with the Semillon, of Sauternes. Again in France, in the upper Loire Valley, where it is also known as the Blanc-Fumé, it yields such charming, fruity, and racy wines as Pouilly-Fumé, Sancerre, and Quincy. Finally, in the North Coast counties of California, especially in Livermore and San Benito, it gives a somewhat fuller-bodied wine, but with the same unmistakable distinction and bouquet and flavor.

SAVOIE (Sah-vwa). District comprising the modern départements of Savoie and Haute-Savoie, south of Lake Geneva and bounded on the east by Italy. Most of the wines are of purely local interest, but Crépy and Seyssel are perhaps exceptions.

SCHARZHOFBERG (Shartz-hawf-bairg). One of the very greatest white wine vineyards of the world, consisting of less than 30 acres of Riesling vines, planted on an exceedingly steep, slate hillside, in Wiltingen, on the Saar, in Germany. The Scharzhof is an old manor house that has belonged for several generations to the Egon Muller family. Most of the vines are the property of Egon Muller himself, but his cousin, A. J. Koch, also owns a portion, as does the endowment of the Cathedral of Trier (the wines from this last being sold as Dom Scharzhofberger). The wine is called simply Scharzhofberger, without mention of Wiltingen, the village, and few wine names and few labels are accorded such unhesitating respect by wine-lovers in all countries. This is no more than fair for there are few wines as remarkable as a Scharzhofberger of a year like '53, or '59, and even the secondary years such as '61 (and '62), yield fine wines of surprising distinction (none better). Light, but with great depth of flavor, austere and yet fragrant and flowery, the great Scharzhofbergers are not far from perfection.

SCHIAVA (Ski-ah-va). Interesting and excellent red wine grape, widely grown in the Italian Tyrol and to some extent along the western shore of Lake Garda. One of the rare fine wine grapes which is a good table grape as well. Generally trained on high pergolas, it gives wines that are rather light in color, low in tannin, fresh, fragrant, early-maturing. Three sub-varieties of Schiava exist: the best, with the lowest yield and smallest berries, is the Schiava gentile (Klein-vernatch, in the local dialect); somewhat more productive is the Schiavone, or Schiava meranese; the Schiava grigia is third in importance, though all three are often grown in the same vineyard, as Santa Maddalena, for example.

Surround yourself with glamour and be practical, too...

in a St. Charles kitchen

This St. Charles custom kitchen is a perfect demonstration of what inspired custom-design can accomplish and it's as functional as it is beautiful. Most women with a flair for glamour regard any St. Charles custom-designed kitchen as the ultimate in style and convenience (which it is). But some of these same women may think it's beyond their reach (which it isn't)! So don't just wish any longer. Talk to your St. Charles dealer-designer. He is a specialist at interpreting your ideas into a complete kitchen plan.

See the St. Charles kitchen in the Edward Durell Stone house "House of Good Taste" exhibit 1964 New York World's Fair.

NOW–even 2 year olds can read!

University conducted research studies have proved that children who come to school as readers start ahead and stay ahead of those who wait until age 6½ to learn this vital educational skill.

The new DOMAN-DELACATO EARLY READING PROGRAM is teaching preschoolers, two, three and four to read and love it.

The program is a joyful learning process—a parent-and-child play approach that was introduced a little over a year ago under the auspices of The Ladies Home Journal and has been successfully proven in more than fifty thousand American homes.

Use the coupon below to write today for complete details on the early learning research and the amazing DOMAN-DELACATO EARLY READING PROGRAM. We will mail you a prospectus and you are, of course, under no obligation. Act now and take advantage of a large pre-publication savings. This may be one of the most important gifts you will ever give your child.

Antiques: Collectors' choice

Since 1922 the magazine that makes collectors and influences them.

In September: ANTIQUES focuses on the late neoclassic style in the furniture of Philadelphia's Antoine Quervelle, English silver of the Regency period, the "Empire dress," and imported ceramics used in America, and in the Greek Revival architecture and furnishings of Nicholas Biddle's Andalusia.

In coming months: a special ANTIQUES feature—Living with antiques in The Mill, Pennsylvania home of Andrew Wyeth; History in towns in Wethersfield, Connecticut; silks for America; English salt-glaze stoneware; Lannuier furniture; silver epergnes; and a November issue devoted exclusively to painting.

In every issue: Articles on today's collecting interests. News of shows and shops, auctions, and special events. Book reviews. Visits to the country's outstanding museums and historic houses.

PING

Situated but a few hours drive from many of the great cities of the eastern United States, the Pennsylvania Dutch country offers more to the tourist than perhaps any other area of our country. Honeycombed with fine hard-topped roads, Lancaster county is the happy hunting ground for the visitor who wishes to concern himself with the quaint and the historic. It is the ideal spot for quiet leisurely travel through the most picturesque and well-tended farm land to be found anywhere.

A RESPONSIVE CORD is stashed away in this cock-decked twine holder. Hang him on the wall of any work area and he'll keep your kitchen drawer free of tangled twine, end the hunt for "lost cord." Coq Rouge is red and yellow felt on sturdy, natural burlap. Scissors included. You supply ball of twine! 8½ x 9¼", $1. Clymer's of Bucks County, HB9, Point Pleasant, Pennsylvania.

THE GOURMET TOUCH of the Pennsylvania Dutch creates a unique snack idea—teeny pretzels, lightly salted then drenched in rich milk chocolate. $2.95 buys a 54-pretzel packet in crushproof Pennsylvania Dutch - decorated box. And in case your thoughts are racing ahead of the calendar, better lay in several packets now. From Bachman Bakeries Corp., HB9, Box #898B, Reading, Pa.

YOU CAN'T BEAT THE DUTCH for the style and color in this child's captain chair. Handmade in famous Lancaster County, it's 23" h. overall. Safety Iron Holder pinions soleplate as it slides onto the ramp: anchors ramp unit to ironing board with an integrated clamping device securely held on any board. Iron is kept fall-proof during use, while cooling; stays put even if exploring tots yank its cord. Holder's use imposes no extra work motions: iron can stay in holder for storage. $2.98; nickeled steel. Henningsen & Co., 31 E. 28th St., N.Y. 16.

If you have pets that shed, this new device is a find for the pick-up problem. As you ply Handy Andy over carpeting or upholstery, pet hair is gathered on contact by roller's crimped-wire bristles; remains stuck until combed out. It works like a charm even on deep nap, dislodges the most stubborn hair particles in its path, in no way harms the surface cleaned. $2.98: Playtel Corp., P.O. Box 20263, Dallas, Tex.

Armstrong's new version of One-Step Floor Care was developed for the special care needs of wood flooring. It safely and thoroughly cleans wood surfaces; when dry, leaves a rich, protective finish that makes the most of wood's natural beauty. As with the original One-Step for vinyl, the new formulation provides the time saving convenience of self-polishing floor cleaning. 98¢: from Armstrong Cork Co., Lancaster, Pa.

Here's a find for drip-dry wash. It hangs from bathtub or shower wall, folds flat when not needed; in portable use, at home or away, it can be hung from a door top or garment hook with a supplied attachment. A continuous strand of tubular plastic is threaded through the aluminum frame, creates 10 clotheslines and protective wall bumpers. Gigson Fold-Flat Dryer is 24½" by 16": 20 ounces. $3.98. Waterlogged in Warsaw Bailed out in Chicago

Mention flooded basements to Lloyd Adams of Warsaw, New York, and he'll probably take a friendly swipe at your head.

It all started when Mr. Adams buried a glass jar containing $1625 in Savings Bonds under his home. A heavy rainstorm, an unusual amount of seepage, and a leak in the jar produced a gummy wad that bore little resemblance to the former family savings.

Fortunately, the Chicago office of the Treasury Department could check the record of Mr. Adams' purchase, and issue new Bonds—no charge. (Mr. Adams sent them the serial numbers, but the Treasury could have traced the Bonds even if he hadn't.)

Every Bond purchase is recorded on film so it can be quickly traced, and the Bond replaced if lost or destroyed. This helps make Savings Bonds one of the safest places in the world to put your money. Uncle Sam guarantees it.

And incidentally, the more Bond dollars you lend Uncle Sam, the stronger our country will be. And the straighter Uncle Sam can stand up for freedom. Aren't those both pretty good reasons for you to buy Bonds?

Help yourself as you help your country

Cosco's new step stool, a foldaway, reduces to 5½ inch depth. An instant operation unfolds it, positive locking occurs automatically. Flared legs angularly braced establish rigidity; extra-wide step has full-size rubber safety tread. Seat (23" high) has tough vinyl upholstery (white, beige, yellow) over urethane-foam padding. Streamlined frame is chromed tubular steel; strong, finely made. $13; Bloomingdale's, N.Y.C. 10022

No moisture gets through the Windo-Sill Plant Tray; it is drip-proof and waterproof even when plants stand on humidifying moistened sand. Deep rolled edges enclose the ribbed base. Durably made of tough plastic in neutral beige hue; 22" long, fits sills 5½" or wider; holds pots up to 6" in diameter. $1. A model for narrow sills has 14½" tray; holds 3 pots; 2 for $1.50. House Plant Corner, Box 810, Oxford, Md.

You just rub Scratch Eraser over marred area, follow with dry wiping, end up with magical scratch hiding on any solid wood or veneer of any color. The unique device was developed by an antique-furniture specialist for dealers and collectors; its sponge's impregnation of molecular chemicals and oils, aside from invisible scratch healing, works wonders for overall wood-cleaning. $1; from Scratch Eraser, Woodbury, Conn.

Safety beacon is easily applied to any glass door with this IMPKO decal created for the purpose. It is double faced so anyone approaching on either side of the door is duly warned that a glass area lies ahead; is large enough to be noticed (9" by 4"), yet unobtrusive. Coloration is antique gold with red accents. $1 for 2. Can also be used to decorate mirrors, shower doors, etc. Buyways, 72 MacDougal St., New York 12, N.Y.

No-stick finish is an extra asset of Tri-Fri stove or oven pan; its obvious asset, the sectional cooking area, is ideal for the needs of a lone wolf or family of two; or in general use, to warm leftovers, divide similar food for dissimilar seasoning, etc. Pan structure is heavy cast aluminum; heats evenly, cooks any food perfectly. Size is 9¾" square; ovenproof handle; $9. Minus the Teflon finish, $6. Downs & Co., Evanston, Ill. 60204.

Enjoy big windows all year 'round with the built-in comfort of Thermopane® insulating glass

To fully enjoy the fun of winter—and summer—you need big window areas. Behind them you can watch the weather, the birds, children at play. But you can enjoy all this more with the comfort Thermopane makes possible.

Thermopane insulates your home against the cold of winter and the hot days of summer. It's more vaportight because of the exclusive Bondermetic Seal®—metal bonded directly to glass. You save on fuel and on summer air-conditioning costs. And, of course, you eliminate the bother and expense of storm sash.

When you buy or build a new home, be sure you get the original and dependable insulating glass — Thermopane.

Thermopane consists of two panes of glass with dehydrated air hermetically sealed between them. There are two types of Thermopane: (1) with the Bondermetic Seal (metal bonded to glass) for windows of all sizes, and (2) GlasSeal® (glass to glass) for wood or metal sash for more conventional sizes.

FOLLOW THE STAR

By MARGARET BENNETT

• For the tourist who is visiting Paris on a starvation budget, there are dozens of guidebooks listing quaint bistros where two pounds of fried potatoes and a liter of vin ordinaire cost 63 cents. For those who have plenty of you-know-what, it is easy to find glowing descriptions of watching the sun sink behind Notre Dame over a plate of crustade de barbue (brill in a pastry shell) and a magnum of champagne at the Tour d'Argent. For the rest of us, whose means exceed fried potatoes slightly and whose tastes exceed them immensely, dining in Paris is more of a problem.

One of the standard pitfalls is selecting a place to eat on the basis of appearance. To the American tourist, every café in Paris looks like a charmingly authentic French restaurant because, of course, it is. The meal you find inside, however, is just as likely to be authentically bad as it is to be authentically good. The French deserve their reputation as the finest cooks in the world, but it is a myth that you can't get a bad meal in France. When French cooking is inferior, it is quite as inferior as inferior cooking anywhere.

The price on the menu posted outside is another unreliable compass. Steering by the same 25-franc (five dollars) point, you may wind up in a comfortable gastronomic harbor or wreck yourself upon greasy shoals.

On a recent visit to Paris, after I had played restaurant roulette for four or five discouraging days, a friend set me straight. He put me onto the Guide Michelin, an annual guidebook rating the restaurants of France that everybody but me had undoubtedly heard about. For the French, it has the authority of a sacred writing. The Paris section of the Michelin is available in pamphlet form for 30 cents at most bookstores in the city.

The Michelin rates restaurants, in descending order of merit, as three-star, two-star, one-star, and no star. Three-star restaurants, of which there are only five in Paris, are those in which, as the Michelin puts it, "price has no meaning." The two-star establishments offer excellent cuisine, but, the guide warns, "Do not expect meals of this quality to be cheap." Then we come to the one-stars, which are simply bonne table—good food. Of course, what would be considered good food in France is equal to the cuisine of the finest restaurants in the United States. The no-star selections serve food that is well prepared but not at all exciting or memorable.

I found that by limiting myself to the 51 one-stars in the guide, I could, for around five dollars a meal, sample dishes that could only be matched by, say, the Four Seasons or Caravelle in New York. Even the most jaded gourmet must admit that going beyond that would be gilding the filet.

The bonne table of a restaurant called Artistes, where I lunched one Sunday after a walking tour of Montmartre, shows the Michelin at its one-star best. I began with a delicately flavored terrine de foie de volaille (chicken-liver pâté cooked in a terrine). For the main course I chose soufflé de turbot, a dish any Montmartre artist would be proud to paint—a sienna-colored mound of soufflé resting on a thick, flake-white slice of boned swordfish with a splash of hollandaise across the side. For dessert I selected the tarte maison of fresh raspberries marinated in kirsch, followed by café noir. This repast, which was accompanied by a half-bottle of well-chilled Vouvray, cost $4.80, including tip.

One-star restaurant menus are almost without exception à la carte. You can only stay within the five-dollar budget by limiting yourself to an hors d'oeuvre, a fish or meat course (which will often be garnished with potatoes or a vegetable), a dessert, and a modest wine. I never selected the vin ordinaire en carafe, but neither did I try a grand cru.

In general, it is safer to avoid one-stars the guide classifies as "luxury" or "top class." In these, because you are paying extra for the setting and the service, you're likely to get a coup de fusil (French for a clipping). And, actually, as restaurants get more exclusive, they get less colorful. I wouldn't have traded, for instance, all the starched shirt-fronts along the Champs Elysees for the company I shared one evening at Les Marronniers, as I was becoming one with a supreme de volaille aux morilles (chicken breast with a kind of mushroom). At the table next to mine, a dachshund was dining in the company of two men and a woman. He sat straight up, his front paws resting on the edge of the tablecloth, his head turning slightly to face whoever was speaking. He graciously tasted everything offered to him from the melon glacé (iced melon) to the baba au rhum. He was such a natural part of the social group that I expected him to interject a bon mot at any moment. This sort of thing you don't see in the de-luxe restaurants where the "No dogs" guide notation means just that.

There is also less aloofness between human beings in the one-stars. With the tables jammed together like automobiles on the Etoile, a fine feeling of camaraderie takes over. It is even considered good form to keep an eye on your neighbor's meal, appraising what is being served and observing his reaction to it. If you notice him rolling his eyes and kissing his fingertips over a pêche Melba, you can ask the waiter to bring you one of the same.

For those who have spent evenings in Berlitz conversation classes and long to roll the r's in an apt French phrase, one-stars are ideal. The waiters seldom speak English, except for the expression "You like ice cream?" which they like to say coyly to Americans at the end of the meal. In the higher-class restaurants, there is no chance at all to cope with the language. Everyone there speaks flawless English, generally with an Oxford accent which, by comparison, makes an American sound like something of a rustic.

If you don't speak French, however, you needn't resign yourself to a nightly coup de fusil in a luxury restaurant. When you and the headwaiter know you don't speak the same language, you both proceed with such caution that the meals generally go off well.

The ritual for getting a table, ordering your meal, and extracting the bill can be mastered easily. To get seated, you state the number of people in your party (un, deux, trois, etc.) plus the word couvert. A party of two would say, "Deux couverts, s'il vous plâit." A dictionary of French dining terms and an index finger roving over the menu will take care of your ordering. L'addition is the magic word that brings the bill.

As for the dictionary of dining terms, the most complete one I have found is Jean Montafian's Menu Reading in France. It is a lightweight paperback that can easily be slipped into a purse or pocket. I paid five francs for my copy at the Thomas Cook office across from the Madeleine.

The only other equipment you'll need for your haute cuisine dining tour is a map of Paris with a street index. The folding one published by Taride is inexpensive and satisfactory. You'll have to plot your course carefully, for most of the one-stars are located on side streets and are so inconspicuous that you are likely to walk right by them without seeing them.

Since these restaurants are scattered all over the city, your best mode of transportation is a combination of the metro and walking. This way you not only work up a good appetite for dinner and get better acquainted with Paris, but with the cab fare you save, you can afford a bottle of champagne with dessert on your last night in Paris.

While enjoying this old French custom, you may want to recall the statement that Dom Pérignon, reputedly the discoverer of champagne, made after his first sip: "Come quickly; I am drinking stars." And, as you look back on your galaxy of dining experiences, you may also want to drink a toast in stars to the one-star restaurants of Paris. ■

Find space for a planning center in your house

■ Many well-run kitchens owe their success to the organization and efficiency provided by a planning center. Having one special place for cookbooks and records keeps food away from papers, and vice versa. The best of these desks includes a stool or chair for writing checks and preparing menus. A telephone nearby is desirable. If there is no extra space in the kitchen, consider an empty bedroom alcove or some other area that is not fully utilized. Drop-leaf writing surfaces hide loose papers, can blend in with surroundings.

That's just one more reminder that it's no trick at all these days to get to places that used to seem so way-out that they had the cachet of the inaccessible—like Kilimanjaro or the Matterhorn. People currently seem to be tooling through Africa as if it were Grand Central Parkway, and there is a fast-growing group of people to whom such marvelously exotic, lointain, romantic names as Bangkok, Istanbul, Fiji, or Beirut have come to mean stopovers where you can pick up terrific bargains in silk or gold or tortoise shell and have some Egyptian cotton shirts made for Charlie at far below normal tailoring costs on the home scene.

You can now, in fact, cruise to Siberia, which we bet is the last way you ever thought of getting there. The cruise ship is the Russian Ordzhonikidze, which has been plying the route between Yokohama in Japan and Nakhodka in Siberia for the past three summers. On the map Nakhodka looks a mere droshky-drive from Vladivostok. If you could get to Yokohama by this year's last sailing date—October 24—you could be in Siberia long before the snow flies, continuing your journey via Trans Siberian Railroad or by air to Moscow and then home through Europe. The 52-hour cruise itself is reputedly a fascinating junket, including a fairly cosmopolitan passenger list of 312, fares ranging from $50 to $118. Upgrade your level of living —a step at a time

• Remodeling is a continuing process, not an isolated project. It begins with the awareness that living can be better than it is. It ends when you have concluded the process of achieving more commodity and delight.

As with any long-term process, it must be taken step by step. This provides the necessary time for sound planning and for the enjoyment of each phase as it is finished. The first and most important step is to begin. Don't be discouraged by what needs to be done. Each well-planned phase, no matter how large or small, will be its own reward.

The photograph above is from the first of eight stories in this issue that help to prove this point.

Combine the best of yesterday and today

• The most important aspect of remodeling and building does not show up in pictures. That factor is time. It takes time to develop the financial and emotional resources to proceed; it takes time to plan and to build. You must be prepared to spend it. There is no substitute.

When the project is large, as is the house and garden renovation shown on these eight pages, it can be done only in stages—a step at a time. The most recent [illegible] upgrading was started here eight years ago, and it [illegible] on improvements made long before. (Please turn the page) mall pool, right, was not changed when the new latticework ome was first built. But the swimming pool required further fa- ilities, unobtrusively added later to the structure, as shown on lan above. 'HE BEST OF YESTERDAY AND TODAY continued

The present owners of this property took the first step in emodeling when they put the latticework roof on the old eahouse in 1956. Later on, the house, which you'll see on ollowing pages, was carefully remodeled inside and out.

The next step was the pool (left). This called for dress- ing rooms. These were added to the teahouse-gazebo, along with a small, efficient kitchen. The old fountain was re- moved and a new decorative floor installed to make the area more useful. Plans are under way for enclosing the roof with transparent plastic. It will then be a waterproof summerhouse and most practical (Please turn the page)

The plan shows the basic formality of the garden design. But the informal character of the surrounding native growth helps soften the total effect. on this seaward slope of Washington State, where the weather is often mild, but wet.

The swimming pool is a formal quatrefoil shape, but the decorative quality does not hinder its primary use. You can swim for 40 feet in each direction.

When the pool was sited, two large planting beds had to be moved. This was not intended when the pool was first considered, but is the kind of thing that often develops. When you make a change in one place, it affects everything that surrounds it. The two old beds were divided into smaller ones (see plan at left), and greatly simplified. They were put on axis with the pool and a fine view of Mount Rainier. Where there used to be a time-consuming assortment of annuals and perennials, there are now mostly rhododendrons and roses, which require less attention. All plants can now be reached from outside the beds for easier care.

The largest step in the remodeling process here was the house. It all started with the porte-cochere, and is a good example of how one thing leads to another. The house was built in the days when guests were (Please turn the page)

The motor court has the grace and style of a French courtyard. The good scale, surrounding plants, and quality of construction and maintenance make it attractive whether or not there are cars parked here. Notice how beautifully the roof line and windows of the house were simplified. The exterior was refinished with handsome handmade brick of a subtle off-white color.

When the vine-covered porte-cochere was removed to provide space for parking, the façade of the house was found to be too unsightly for words. One improvement led to another, until the total of what you see on these pages was finally established.

brought to the door by chauffeur. For this mode of arrival, the porte-cochere was perfect. Today, most guests drive their own cars, and there should be easy parking as near the entry as possible. It was decided to remove the porte-cochere. When this was done, it revealed unmatched windows and other architectural horrors of the past. The only solution was to change the façade and provide a new drive and entry court. This led inevitably to remodeling the exterior. This, in turn, led to the interior remodeling. The result is much more extensive than originally planned, but it is also infinitely more rewarding.

A completely new glassed-in room was added to the side of the house facing the swimming pool and the renovated garden. The original brick walk, which was built 45 years ago, connects it directly to the remodeled summerhouse. The new room serves beautifully to relate the garden to the house the year around. The garden is well worth viewing at all seasons. Against the backdrop of native fir trees there is a large collection of rhododendrons and azaleas. These

New target for remodeling: The Town House

By MARION GOUGH

• All over the country, from Back Bay to Nob Hill, people are rediscovering the city, finding that urban living frequently offers advantages that can't be matched in suburbia. At the same time, the town house is also being rediscovered. But that nostalgic reminder of the past century does more than satisfy sentimental appreciation for the dignity and elegance that once was. The high-stooped, high-ceilinged city-row house usually offers a bargain in sturdy, old-time construction, plus that most precious of all present-day commodities—space. Best of all, it need not require drastic and expensive structural change to bring it livably up to date, as you will see from this six-page "before" and "after" documentation of a transformed San Francisco town house. Architect John L. Field made the major changes primarily by redistributing space, through subtle rearrangement of interior walls and door openings.

(Please turn the page)

AFTER

The present living room was created by throwing together the former "front parlor" and the "back sitting room." Continuous built-in storage cupboards, deep as the parlor chimney breast, smooth out the wall and join the two rooms visually as one. Floor plan on page 150 shows how effectively a change in the placement of a door to the hall increased the sense of spaciousness. The old light fixtures were kept, but fitted with modern spots.

Changing door openings in parlor, dining room, and kitchen redistributed space so that traffic now flows efficiently. There is also wall space for furniture in the living-room bay-window area. Other changes: added lavatory and renovated kitchen.

Second-floor remodeling consisted of revamping the old bathroom and creating a brand new bath and dressing room from a "box-car" bedroom. Changing door to master bedroom increased space.

Former route from entry to and through the kitchen was devious. Remodeled kitchen puts traffic to patio on a straight line with the living room. Peninsula places all kitchen functions within easy reach of each other. New run of wall and base cabinets more than doubles the former storage space.

Whether its façade is New York's brownstone, Boston's brick, or the West Coast's bow-windowed frame, a town house is usually narrow. This one is about 18′. Rooms are generally high-ceilinged, strung out in boxcar placement which permits the merging of several smallish rooms into a few of ample proportions. You can expect such individualizing dividends as excellent architectural quality in interior woodwork, details like mullioned windows, oriels, leaded glass, and ironwork, which represent craftsmanship almost nonexistent today. Plumbing and wiring usually need replacement. Structurally, the houses are usually good, but plumbing and wiring often need replacement. (Please turn the page)

Dining room acquired a bonus of furniture placement space, thanks to the wall created by the new lavatory and coat closet in hall. Aluminum honeycomb over sideboard diffuses daylight from skylight, becomes a luminous ceiling when electric light is lit.

ARCHITECT-OWNER:
John L. Field

AFTER ▶

Pantry, seen through the center door of the "before" kitchen below, is now a breakfast room. New kitchen built-ins take over the pantry's storage function. Sliding glass doors replace the double-hung windows and make the new terrace a part of the total living space.

BEFORE

Shortening a long hall, as the architect did here, can confer a remarkable bounty of extra space on another room. This maneuver threw into the master bedroom the space previously taken up by a hall closet. Long wall, left, encloses the bath and dressing room converted from a former bedroom and made part of the master suite. This necessitated the filling in of the door shown at left in "before" picture below.

◀ AFTER

Not the least advantage of a town house is the small amount of planting and consequent upkeep needed to surround it with pleasant greenness. Most of the backyard here has been turned into patio or outdoor lounging space, the immediate threshold area covered in wood decking and the rest of the lot paved in masonry. A small bed of city-blooming flowers, a few fence-climbing vines and potted shrubs do the trick.

More photographs on page 204

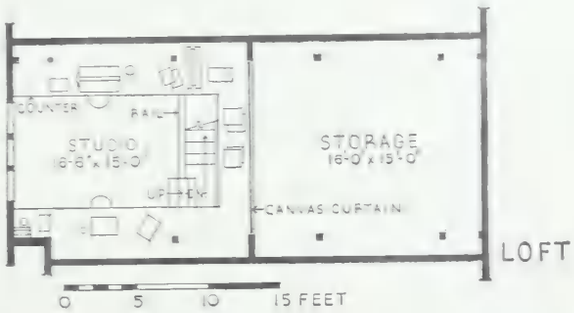
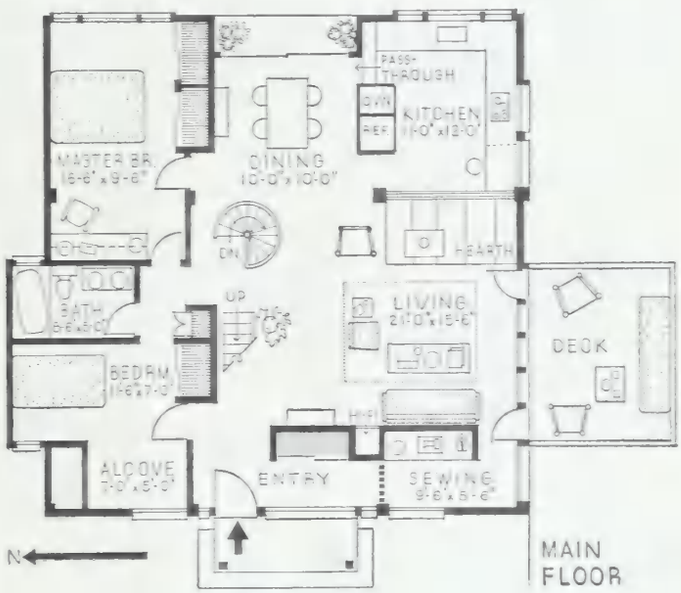
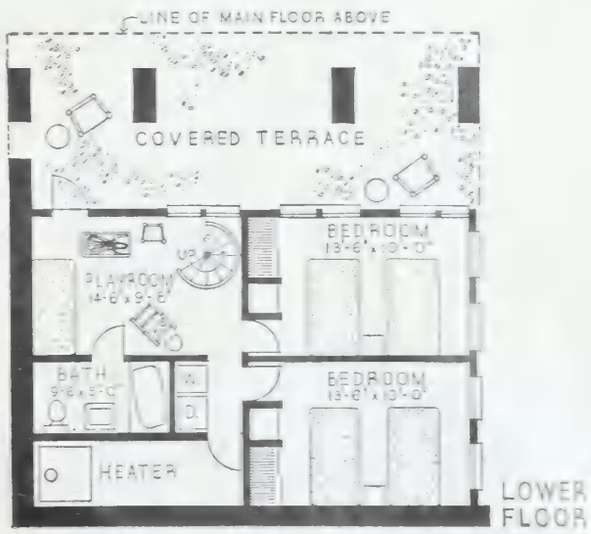
continued



The usual narrowness of the town house means that any changes must be made within a limited framework. And since most town houses are usually built in a row, sharing common walls with flanking houses, the fulfillment of any renovational dream is always contingent upon the next-door neighbors' interest. Every inch has to count. But to a good architect this is rather more satisfying than frustrating, presenting a challenge in the use of space. If you study the plans here you will see how even slight manipulations of space can effect tremendous change. By adding 36 inches to the living-room wall at one end—achieved by filling in part of a doorway—and opening up about six feet of the wall at the other end, the room in this old house enjoys the same sense of spaciousness and free movement as the "open plan" of contemporary houses. Shortening the long upstairs hall, removing an extra closet, and repositioning the entry door gained the master bedroom about 32 valuable square feet of uncluttered space.



AFTER BEFORE



Architectural significance, like the distinguishing bow window now delineating the "sitting" area of the living room, is often part of the bargain one gets in buying a town house of past-century vintage. Today, equivalent wood-workmanship in window and door frames, in baseboard molding, and in the turnings of banisters and stair rails, would be hard to find and pay for. Desk and bookshelf were built into recess beside fireplace.

A silk purse of a house from a sow's ear of a barn

Plan shows how rooms were arranged on the structure's three levels. Because of the slope of the site, both the main living floor and the lower floor for the children can be entered at ground level. Lower floor opens onto a large terrace, sheltered by the overhang of the floor above. Loft is a studio workroom.

• Why do people fall in love with barns? They do it because they are excited by space that zigs and zags and sometimes soars. They are enchanted by nooks and crannies, by lofts and balconies, by stairs that make an adventure of climbing. In barns they see the possibilities of rooms that are more than monotonous boxes. They see wonderful old materials that they either can't get today or couldn't afford if they were offered.

And it's a challenge. Can you preserve it? In making a barn into a house, can you keep that wonderful aura of virtue and simplicity that so many feel our times have lost? Under such circumstances, giving new life to a rare old barn seems as much a trust, a duty, a deed of mercy, as it does a labor of love. (Please turn the page)

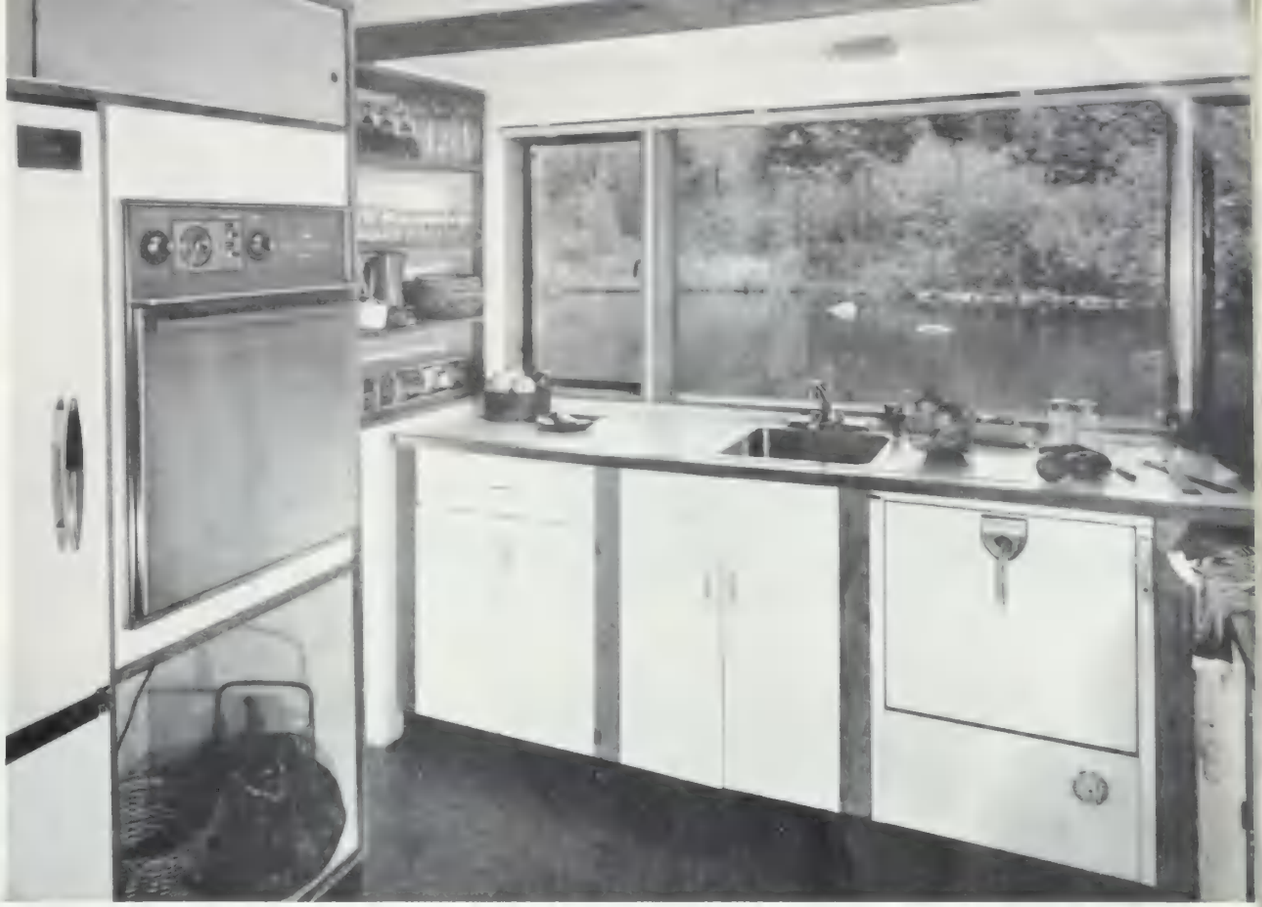
This Connecticut barn, built over 80 years ago, was being used for raising pigs when Architect D. Bruce Falconer discovered it and recognized its possibilities. How these possibilities were realized is shown on facing page. Barn was structurally sound, a crucial consideration in undertaking any remodeling.

BEFORE

Basic changes were few. The rear roof was swung up one foot for better clearance; glass areas and deck were added to make the outdoors a real part of the house. Walls were insulated and their exterior covered with rough-sawn cedar siding. The priceless chestnut beams and old stonework were left intact.

AFTER



ARCHITECT-OWNER:
D. Bruce Falconer

ALL "AFTER" PHOTOGRAPHS OF THIS HOUSE BY © PHILIP R. PECEL

The walls of the barn were opened to make the outdoors a readily accessible and useful part of the house. In the living room, above, panes of fixed glass, flanked by doors, take you out on a deck with a pleasant southern exposure. Handsome floor is of long-leaf yellow pine. Wall of cypress boards, seen at right, is actually a storage divider, housing a Hi Fi and a sewing center.

The barn's location near a pond was one of the important reasons for deciding to remodel it. Right, you can see how idyllic it makes the view through the kitchen window, where the roof was raised one foot. Before that, a beam cut across the view at eye level.

Everywhere, just as here in the dining area, the roots-in-the-past quality of the old posts and beams mellows the shiny look of things that are new and adds a quality of depth and stability. The balcony in dining area is just big enough to step out on, but it carries the floor beyond the glass and softens the demarcation between indoors and out. Kitchen is to the right.

More than that, a barn gives you a head start on a house. So many decisions and questions are already settled. It's not like building a completely new house. The overall form is already established. Foundation and structure are there. To the amateur builder, this means the trickiest, most laborious, most unrewarding part is done. All that remains are the pleasures of finishing. How far wrong can you go? There are no close tolerances in a barn. If efforts are less than perfect, so what? It will never be noticed. And it will be your creation. It (Please turn to page 198)

Here you are looking down from the loft, past the main level, with just a glimpse of ground floor at bottom of spiral stairs.

Removal of a typical front porch (already done at left) and a useless gable were the major elements in the architectural face-lifting given this century-old house. Cutting back the insignificant and awkward roof overhang added new dignity to the structure. Center window (upstairs) was changed to match the others. Another before-and-after view of this house is on the cover.

ONCE abandoned–

NOW the pride of the block

America has a vast inventory of houses like this. They have roomy interiors, sturdy construction, and, usually, a convenient location. They can be handsomely remodeled, as this one in Greensboro, N.C., proves

By GUY HENLE

• Imagination is a precious commodity. When Mr. and Mrs. Henry Zenke first saw their present home, it was in the ramshackle condition you see in the "before" photographs. Fortunately, they were able to see beyond the peeling paint and visualize the handsome house seen below.

As a designer, Mr. Zenke was able to judge the basic soundness of the structure. For Mrs. Zenke, the spaciousness of the rooms and the convenient location of the house had special appeals. Only a block from Mr. Zenke's office, it allows him to participate more completely in family life.

Originally two houses (each more than 100 years old), the structure had already had a colorful history when the Zenkes acquired it in 1951. Reconstruction was done in various stages and only recently completed. The first step was a reconditioning of the plumbing, heating, wiring, and weatherproofing to put the house in livable shape. For some years the owners lived in an apartment on (Please turn the page)

L-shape porch at the rear is being ripped off in photograph at right, but foundation was saved to support additional space for the house. As seen above, on the first-floor level this space is enclosed for a picture-windowed gallery, while over it is a screened piazza for sleeping, sitting, even dining. Addition has new outside door leading down steps to terrace and boxwood garden.

Now called the library, this was the living room in the old house. Not a small room by any means (see plan on page 163), it nevertheless has an intimate feeling in contrast to the openness of the new living room. Furniture in the room is arranged casually, with the hearth as the focus. The mantel, bookcases, and all the woodwork in the room are new, designed by Mr. Zenke.

At the side of each of the built-in bookshelves, storage spaces are used to conceal hi-fi speakers, record storage, etc. Most furnishings and accessories here are one-of-kind antiques selected with great care. At right is English accountant's desk.

the second floor while renting out an apartment on the lower floor. This gave them an opportunity to deal with sections of the house one at a time instead of being faced with the monumental job all at once.

Two years ago, major changes were made in the downstairs area, and the Zenkes occupied the entire house for the first time. The remodeling is now virtually complete, though, as any homeowner knows, there are always more plans.

The floor plan of the house was a simple L, formed earlier when the two houses had been put together. At the front had been the usual center hall flanked by a living room and bedroom, with the dining room in the back. The kitchen and service areas were in a separate unit further to the rear. Since Mrs. Zenke does all of her own cooking, this arrangement of rooms was unsatisfactory. She saw no need of being isolated from her family or, when entertaining, from her guests during meal preparation. (Please turn the page)

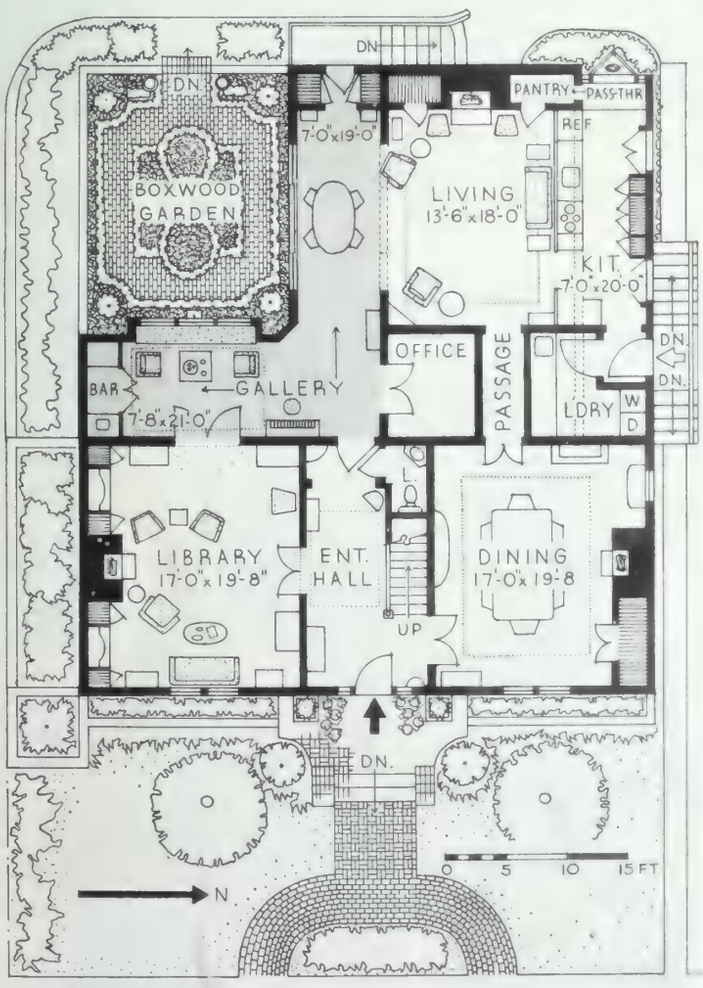
Just a step from the hearth-side coziness of the library is this pleasant windowed gallery looking out on the garden. Lot is narrow but deep: windows take advantage of long view. This newly-constructed space sits on the old porch foundation.

The L-shape gallery is quite contemporary in feeling, but because it seems somewhat separate (it is reached through double doors, left), it fits easily with the traditional in the rest of the house.



Louvered doors at the far end of the gallery conceal a complete, well-lighted, walk-in bar, with an ice-making unit, counter space, and cabinets. All gallery area has a vinyl tile floor.

The graciousness of an old house is clearly evident in this photograph, which looks through double doors from the library across a generous entrance hall with graceful stairs, to the formal dining room. White vinyl in hall is inset with black diamonds.

Shaded area on plan shows space added to the house. The L-shape gallery gives extra dimension to both the library and the newly arranged living room-kitchen, and also provides easy passage from one to the other. Connection (tunnel-like corridor) between kitchen and dining room is result of years-ago remodeling.

ONCE ABANDONED, NOW THE PRIDE OF THE BLOCK

The new floor plan (at the left) shows how the Zenkes added to and adapted the space to their way of life. The old living room became their library—an intimate area for books, music, a fire on chilly evenings, and deep, comfortable chairs. In the rear wing they created in one room a living room and kitchen, with the food preparation and cooking facilities so artfully concealed that it is impossible to tell you are in a kitchen (see photographs on next two pages).

To connect and expand the library and living room, they enclosed an L-shape gallery, a windowed space looking out on the boxwood garden and brick terrace at the rear. From the library, the gallery is entered through double doors. Here there is a sitting area with a window seat, deep chairs, and a bar behind louvered doors. Since the bar is complete with its own icemaker, it is not dependent at all on the kitchen. This sitting area in the gallery is explored in the three photographs on the opposite page. The view is perhaps the pleasantest in the house, since it looks the long way on a long, narrow lot. (Please turn the page)

Puzzle: Find the kitchen in this picture. The answer is partly revealed below, then comes through clearly at the bottom of the opposite page. The cabinetry look of the breakfront, the embroidery-paneled screens at each side, and the partially curtained partition camouflage the usual kitchen counters, storage, and equipment. Breakfront also houses air conditioning and Hi Fi.

A few steps along the gallery take you to the open and informal living room seen on these two pages. By the window is a dining table, and many family meals are taken right here. But the triumph of planning is the kitchen that runs along the opposite side of the room. Mr. Zenke designed a breakfront to take the place of the usual kitchen cabinets, so that the high style of the room is maintained. This has ample storage space for china, crystal, cooking utensils, waste receptacles, air conditioning, and hi-fi equipment. Behind screening of different heights are the cooking facilities, refrigerator, and counter work space. Under the window at the far end are more base cabinets and a mixing counter. From here Mrs. Zenke can reach through a pass-through to an ample pantry that holds all dry foods.

A full-fledged kitchen is hidden in this living room

This is the other end of the new living room-kitchen. A table for informal dining occupies newly enclosed space in the second leg of the L-shape gallery. Because of its furnishings, room has none of the utilitarian feel of usual family room-kitchens.

Mrs. Zenke does all her own cooking and planned the kitchen accordingly. Photograph at left shows how complete it is despite its camouflage. Behind refrigerator screen is a door to complete pantry that makes up for shortage of storage cabinets. Drawing shows access to it through pass-through from sunken counter.

The plant material was chosen to provide variety and interest along the walk from the motor court to the entry, and to soften the strong architectural lines of the house. The curved walk is a classic oriental device for accenting the impact of what it leads to. In this case, it is a display of sculpture on a gravel terrace. Motor court serves for off-street parking and as a driveway for combined carport and garden storage area.

From a new garden grew a better way of life

Inspired by the Orient, reinforced by House Beautiful's issues on the concepts of Shibusa, and conditioned by the character and climate of Long Island, this garden has brought new beauty and serenity to the owner's environment

By CARROLL C. CALKINS

AFTER

This view of the house from the back is from a path that leads through the new garden. Seats, interesting rocks, and sculpture are found en route. The hillock was created to make possible the lovely waterfalls shown on the following pages. Changing the shape of the land itself has also made the garden more interesting to see and walk through. The land has been sculptured into a design that includes the house as part of the whole.

Back of the house was originally bare of all landscaping, as was the front. The structure and the site were visually separate.

■ The development of this garden was as natural as the growth of the plants that are in it. The project started about five years ago, when the owners, Mr. and Mrs. Richard W. Lawrence, decided that the beauty and serenity of a Japanese garden was what they wanted for their new house on Long Island.

They read everything they could get on the subject, and then went to Japan to find out more at first hand. There they were fortunate enough to meet Tansai Sano, one of the foremost landscape architects in that country. He showed them some fine private gardens that they could not have otherwise seen, and explained something of their philosophy and symbolism. He helped them select stones and statuary to ship home and gave suggestions for their arrangement.

They returned from Japan in time for the August 1960 issue of HOUSE BEAUTIFUL on "Shibui . . . the word for the highest level in beauty." Mrs. Lawrence studied this issue conscientiously and attributes much of the success of the garden to what she learned.

The actual building of the garden took less than two years. But this was preceded by a year or so of research, and refinements and improvements are still being made, a step at a time. A greenhouse was added to the balcony, and the sunken terrace now has a roof and has become a combination gazebo-lath house for the summer display of the plants that are kept inside during winter.

Since the garden was finished, the focus of life has moved from indoors to out. When the weather [illegible] is inclement, the plants, pools, and waterfalls can be enjoyed from the screened loggia which opens off the living room. In good weather, the terrace that is just outside the door is used (picture above). For parties, or for a change of pace and scene, the sunken terrace (right) is an inviting destination.

The landscaping brings everything together. The house is now a part of the total scene, rather than apart from it. The important element of mystery and surprise has also been added. You do not see it all at once. You must walk and observe carefully to enjoy what's there, which adds to the visitors' enjoyment as well as the owners'.

This restful scene, which enriches the life of the owners, was inspired by their trip to Japan. While they were there, Japanese Landscape Architect Tansai Sano made some sketches and selected some choice stones for them. Three tons of statuary, lanterns, and stone, including the bridge (right), were shipped back for use here.

The remodeled home of Mr. and Mrs. Ogden B. Armour stands on the shore of San Diego Bay. Looking back at the house from the beach (above), you see outdoor living areas across the entire width. All the upstairs bedrooms now have windows toward the view. This magnificent home was once the outmoded shell seen below, but site made drastic remodeling worthwhile.

You can change the house but not the site

■ The words above are simple enough, but they reveal an important and little-realized lesson for home buyers. Most of the choice home sites near our great cities were bought and built on 30 or 40 or even 50 years ago. The houses that stand on these sites may not appeal to us today, either for esthetic or for practical reasons. Since we are concerned with the house as an instrument of living, we might tend to bypass places so out of tune with our times. But, as the story on these eight pages reveals, a house can be changed to fit our times and be worth every cent of the cost, if the site is rare and choice. (Please turn the page)

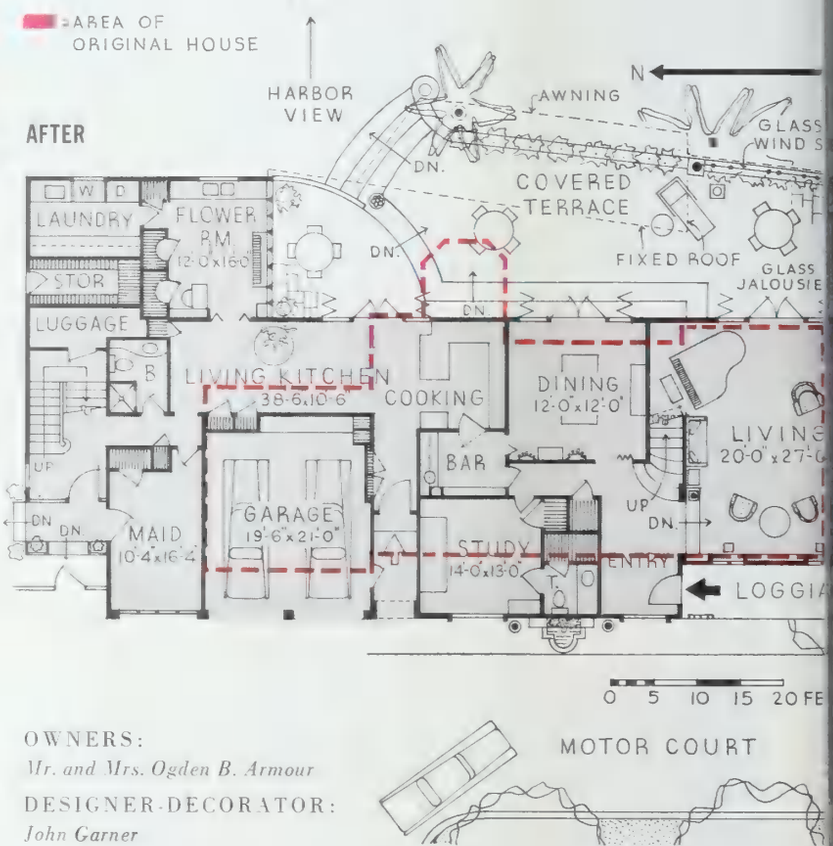
At left are two views of the terrace that caters to the variety of climates found at the San Diego shore. At one end is an open, canvas-covered area (top photograph) for warm, balmy days. At the other is a roofed, glass-enclosed section (bottom photograph) for cool, windy times. Glass louvers at far end can be opened for another variation. At right, the bay is seen through glass panels. Planting on both sides at the floor line makes the glass seem almost nonexistent.



Before remodeling, the house was typical of the two-story type built 30-40 years ago. Small second floor only had two bedrooms. Magnificent views of water, to the rear, cannot be seen here.

The remodeled home on these pages is owned by Mr. and Mrs. Ogden B. Armour. The original structure had really nothing to offer them as a gracious home. The minimum plan, above right, showed usual small living room, dining room, kitchen with breakfast nook, and library. Upstairs were only two bedrooms. They would not have given the house a second thought except that it was situated on the shore of San Diego Bay, with the most beautiful view of the boat-filled harbor. Here, indeed, was a site worth developing.

The remodeling was so complete that most of the original structure has been obscured. Downstairs, the entry and living room were enlarged and extended, a new living-kitchen was created, and such extras as a flower-arranging room, a laundry, and storage room were added. Upstairs, a full second floor was built the entire length of the house, to provide four bedrooms, four baths, and a sitting room.

The house now offers everything (Please turn the page)

Richness of interiors in the remodeled house are shown in these two photographs of the new living room (above and right). Piano alcove seen at right was a closet in the original house. Opening up this space and adding four feet to the width of the entire room gave a gracious new feeling to it. Windows in the photograph above look out on the loggia that leads to the front door.

in the way of space, arrangement of rooms, and equipment needed for the comfort and convenience of modern life. The provisions for outdoor living are so complete that it makes use of the open-air spaces possible no matter what the weather. At one end of the stone-floored terrace is a glass-enclosed section, fully roofed, that is pleasantly sheltered regardless of how hard the wind blows off the water. On balmier days, the sitting is nicer at the other, open-air end of the terrace. There are dining and game tables at both ends. Glass jalousies can be opened in the open wall to allow cross breezes, if that is necessary.

Indoors, the designing of the spaces was just as carefully worked out. A study of the floor plan will reveal that there are spaces for all kinds of activities, each one with its own equipment, work area, and storage.

More photographs on next two pages.

Because of its location between the kitchen and the dining room, the spacious bar also serves as a pantry. Cabinets here store much of the china, linen, and silver needed for table setting.

Off the big new kitchen is a special room for Mrs. Armour. It holds her wide collection of cooking and flower-arranging books. It has a special sink and counter for flower-arranging. It has a small piano for her personal use. Its closets store her special collection of china and glassware. It has a planning desk for homework. In short, it is a place for her personal interests and activities. Above are the piano and planning desk. Above right is another corner of the room, showing the door opening to the laundry. At the right are the flower-arranging sink and counter.

◀ The formal dining room is perhaps the one room that was changed the least during the remodeling. It is not a large room, so sit-down dinners here are limited to small groups. In this view you are looking through the door into enlarged entrance hall

YOU CAN CHANGE THE HOUSE continued

The Armour house is now arranged so all four bedrooms on the second floor have views out across the water (see plan on page 174). They range across the rear, while baths, closets, and a sitting room are at the front. This is Mrs. Armour's bedroom.

The upstairs sitting room has the comfortable intimacy of what used to be called "the library." It has a working fireplace, deep chairs, ample bookshelves, magazine racks, a tea table, and a large study table. In addition to its traditional functions, this sitting room now serves as the television room. The set, on a swivel, is built into a cabinet in one corner of the room (above).

More photographs of this house on page 196

This is another view of Mrs. Armour's bedroom, seen at the top of the opposite page. It illustrates perfectly how well the designer-decorator, John Garner, has blended new furnishings with the rare pieces that are family heirlooms. In this room a single fabric was used as wall covering, draperies, and decoration for the bed.

Son's bedroom occupies one corner of the second floor. It is handsomely decorated in traditional style, with colors that take their cue from the warm brown of the wood paneling. Each of the four bedrooms in Armour house has its own complete bathroom.

Mr. Armour's room is furnished as much for relaxing and working as for resting. Both windows seen at the right look out on the water. All the moldings and other woodwork in these rooms were planned to complement decorating. Note interior shutters here.

Updating a fine old apartment

By MADELAINE THATCHER

Complex plan, product of the era of many servants, has been made workable more by adroit planning and by original thinking than by major structural changes. Area shown in tone was two-room apartment added to larger one to make ample master suite and bath-dressing room.

TWO COLOR PHOTOGRAPHS BY WESLEY BALZ

• The remodeled apartment shown on these pages is in one of the oldest luxury apartments in New York City. The Osborne, just a few steps from Carnegie Hall, was completed in 1885. About then it had become fashionable for the wealthy to give up their large mansions for more easily maintained apartments. The architects of these new, multi-family innovations strove to make them as elegant and elaborate as the recently vacated mansions had been. Lobbies were museums of carving, gilding, and intarsia. Individual apartments were large and high-ceilinged, planned for privacy with thick, soundproof walls and dignified proportions.

Most of these fine old structures have been demolished, but by an ironic twist of fate, those remaining are the most sought-after, cooperatively owned residences in New York, often preferred to the large, new, fully air-conditioned but sometimes quite characterless luxury cooperatives which have proliferated in New York since the war.

The Lorenzo Alvarys, whose apartment is shown here, value the qualities of this old building, so rich in tradition. Mr. Alvary, the internationally known opera singer, had lived in the Osborne for many years. When the building became a cooperative, the Alvarys had a chance to buy one of the larger apartments, plus an adjoining smaller one that became the master bedroom suite. (Please turn the page)

AFTER Mr. Alvary's study, a completely private world, was formerly a bedroom. Designed to meet the needs of an internationally known opera singer, this room has a whole wall of built-in storage with musical scores and librettos ranged around a piano. Built-in desk has over 60 square feet of work surface, large file drawers. The walls are hung with memorabilia of the opera.

The Alvarys were fortunate in having as interior designer Virginia Conner Moseley, who valued the character of the rooms and their richly scaled moldings and woodwork. She worked out the structural changes necessary to make the apartment function as a comfortable and inviting home. But she was able to retain its distinction. She carefully preserved the original window reveals with their recessed shutters as well as the cornices, dadoes, and double doors so characteristic of the great era which also produced the Diamond Horseshoe and Carnegie Hall.

Throughout the apartment, color plays a large part in unifying and enriching the interiors. In the major rooms, light, muted tones form a backdrop for the brilliant colors in the modern paintings.

In the original apartment the emphasis was on bedrooms (there were four). The Alvarys needed more living space. What had been the dining room became the library. A small but very elegant dining room (see top photo opposite) was made from one bedroom. Mr. Alvary's study, shown on this page, had also been a bedroom. The adjoining apartment acquired by the Alvarys compensated for this pre-empting of bedrooms by giving them a truly luxurious master suite worthy of the grand tradition of the Osborne.

As compact and efficient as a ship's galley, the Alvarys' kitchen occupies a space slightly larger than 9′ x 17′. There is no hint of the 19th Century here. Continuous lighting under wall cabinets provides excellent illumination for the countertop work surfaces. The space above the cabinets has been furred out to conceal the ductwork for the range and wall-oven exhaust fans. Where serious cooking is now a pleasure

Well equipped and carefully engineered, this is the kitchen of a famous gourmet cook. It has been so organized that nothing interferes with the enjoyment of the art of cooking

By NANCY CRAIG

• This is a most unusual kitchen. It was planned by and for a woman who knows fine food, writes books about cooking, and has an enviable reputation as a creative cook. To Helen Bryson, preparing meals seven days a week is an exciting challenge. Her many-sided kitchen reflects her enthusiasm for cooking as an art.

What makes this kitchen so different from most? Its equipment, for one thing. Each piece was selected for top performance, and in many cases duplicate installations were made. The result is a kitchen within a kitchen.

There are, for example, two complete cooking centers in separate areas of the room. While a gourmet dinner is being prepared at one center, food for the young children can be prepared at the other. Since electricity sometimes fails during a bad storm in the country, one cooking center is electric, and the other is gas. A sink with disposer and dishwasher is located near each cooking area, so there is no lack of space for either preparation or clean-up. With the amount of entertaining that is done in this home, the two dishwashers get steady use.

The bar area, with its own generous storage facilities, is located near three refrigerator units and the freezer, which is equipped with an automatic icemaker. A second and larger freezer just outside the (Please turn the page) kitchen is used to sharp-freeze the delicate pastry shells and to hold special soups and sauces, cakes and pastas that are prepared in advance of parties.

Like many homemakers, Helen Bryson had been indoctrinated with the theory that a kitchen should be compact to save steps and time. Having lived abroad for several years, she had cooked in many types of kitchens. As her knowledge and interest in cooking grew along with her fame as a cook, she found that a small kitchen, no matter how well planned, could not satisfy her needs. Even if cooking facilities were adequate, there never seemed to be enough room for the family. (Please turn to page 203)

"Before" and "after" floor plans show how three cramped, divided spaces were combined to create one wonderfully coordinated kitchen area. Though large (over 13′ by 24′), this kitchen wastes no steps. It is really two kitchens in one, each with its own compact and completely separate cooking facilities.

With the warmth and charm of a spacious old country kitchen, it is well organized and equipped with every convenience. What appears at a glance as an unbroken paneled wall is a series of flush doors stained to match the surrounding paneling.

They made the best of an old-fashioned kitchen

No structural changes were required to hide its defects. Good equipment and planning made it attractive and workable

• The original kitchen was typical of those built at the turn of the century. Drab, completely disorganized, and inconvenient to work in, it had all the usual faults. There was far too little storage space. Work counters were inadequate, and its minimum equipment was old and outdated. The room's chief virtue was its 18′ by 18′ size. However, with its walls cut up by seven glass-paneled doors leading to closets and other areas of the house, it seemed hopeless.

Mrs. Slater, who is a decorator, had definite ideas about the appearance of her kitchen. She likes to cook and entertain and has a rich background in fine food and its preparation. As a member of the family that started The Four Seasons and other famous restaurants, she also had ideas about the organization of a kitchen.

How to cope with the problem of so many doors was her first consideration. Closing off even half of them and redesigning new entryways in other parts of the house was too costly and too impractical. (Please turn to page 205)

Floor plan shows difficulty of planning a coordinated kitchen in room broken up by seven door openings. Lack of wall space for storage cabinets was solved by two large closets, one detailed for walk-in pantry and other for cleaning equipment and supplies.

When drainage and erosion are problems:

"Pave" your yard

AFTER

■ The advantage of having a wood deck when the floor level of your house isn't at ground level is well known. It eliminates the barrier of steps. It puts the outdoors at the same level as the indoors. The virtue of a deck when there is no flat land is also well known. It gives you a level, smooth floor without grading and filling. Less familiar is that a deck can be the solution when there are erosion or drainage problems. This Seattle house is a good example.

On a hilltop site, or where soil is unstable and heavy rains are inclined to undermine a slab paving, a deck is the wise choice. It permits runoff water to go under it freely, and the structure itself is too light to predispose toward slides. The wood deck illustrated here was built after the owners had the disastrous experience of having on-grade paving washed down the slope. The deck ended the erosion problem and has now been in successful use for nearly ten years.

You know how mud squishes out from under your feet. Unstable soil can be squeezed out by the weight of heavy paving in just the same way. That is what happened in "before" picture. Undermined, the paving broke away and literally slid down the slope. A lightweight wood deck imposes no such burden on soil.

Out went the car —In went the kitchen

• Interesting and useful space was discovered here, all under the same old roof, and with no major structural changes. Two walls of an existing storage locker were extended, under the old roof line, to join with the original house.

This simple plan is so good because it is free of conventional thinking about rectangular rooms. The result is a non-boxy room that creates a long diagonal space, producing the illusion of greater space than a rectangular solution could have done. The eyes see beyond actual limits of corners to terrace at one end and through mitered plate-glass windows at the other. Diagonal is five feet longer than any side.

A SILK PURSE OF A HOUSE

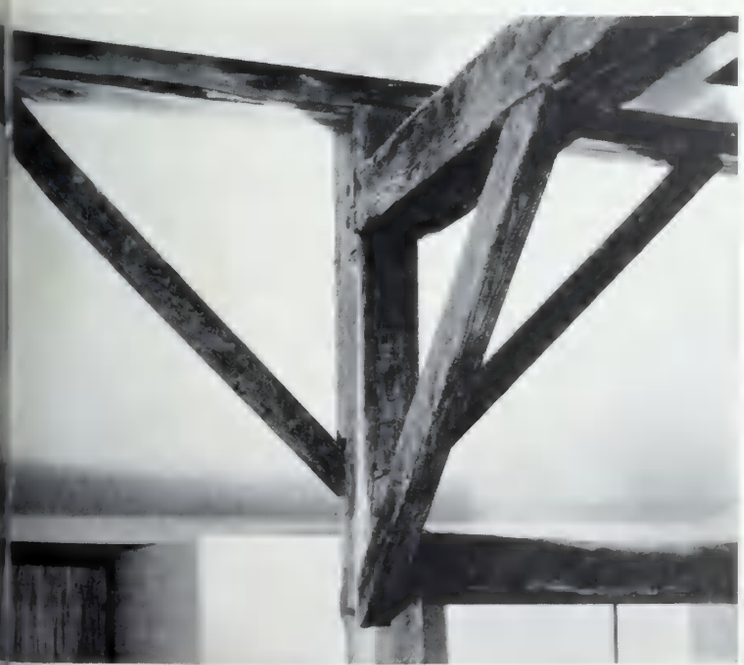
Space-saving spiral staircase connects main living area to this ground-floor children's playroom, and to their bedrooms and bath which adjoin it. Rear of house overhangs lower floor, creating the sheltered outdoor play space you see just beyond the glass.

was in this spirit that Mr. and Mrs. D. Bruce Falconer approached the barn remodeling project shown on these pages.

Under some circumstances, it might have been cheaper to start from scratch. Labor costs, especially when major repairs must be made, can make remodeling more expensive than new construction. But this barn was completely sound, and the Falconers planned to do most of the work themselves so there was a definite cash saving

No attempt was made to impose a conventional house plan upon the space. Instead, the barn, and what it was, was allowed to dominate. The massive beams and structure were preserved and expressed. To hide them would have been to squander the greatest asset. Their geometric pattern is the melodic theme of the house.

Old hayloft became this studio, reached by stepping over the big timber seen in foreground. You are looking at the north wall. Carrying the glass to the roof line keeps this area flooded with soft, even daylight. Foam plastic between rafters insulates roof.



The main entrance to the barn became the front entrance to the house, as seen above. A gravel court lies between the house and garage (out of view at right). There is no grass or lawn. It is either gravel or natural woodland terrain, left almost as is.

The house was opened to the outors with floor-to-ceiling glass, a ck, and a balcony. The roof of e shedlike rear extension of the use was pivoted up like a hinge, imaginative, but not difficult, aneuver. It gained a foot more adroom and a better view out. rtitions were installed to divide space into the required rooms.

When you start with a structure that's already self-supporting, you are free to put partitions almost wherever you choose.

With three levels, it was easy to achieve separation and privacy. The main level became the adult area; the ground floor, the children's area; the loft, a studio. ■

Product information on page 214.

Though it may look primitive, the barn structure is actually a highly sophisticated piece of engineering. Each part interlocks with those it joins, and only oak pegs are needed to hold them together. In remodeling, timbers were wire-brushed, then waxed.

must expect some preliminary tingle-tangle about financial arrangements and visas. However, the travel agency, Cosmos, 45 West 45th St., New York, which specializes in this kind of off-beat travel, makes the red tape as painless as possible. Gabriel Reiner, owner of Cosmos, is an American attorney who speaks Russian fluently and has been credited as being one of the most persuasive forces in getting the Communists to open the iron gates to Americans. (Another bit of persuasion, according to the observant, is a real need for the hard, never-mind-how-capitalistically-earned, dollar.)

As American agents for Intourist, the Russian government travel bureau, Cosmos has taken on all sorts of special-interest travel arrangements for business and professional people, cultural exchange programs, diplomatic missions, and garden-variety American citizens who simply have a yen to see how the other team lives. It also arranges visits to such satellites as Czechoslovakia, Hungary, and Poland, and has lately expanded its junkets to the way-out to include, of all places, Mongolia. In 1963 sixty Americans made the trip, and by the end of this year four more groups will have entered the storied realm of Genghis Khan, which is the modern buffer between Russia and Red China and as crucial as a land can be. This year's final group of adventurers will foregather in Moscow on September 13 for three days while visas are arranged, will then proceed to Ulan Bator, the Mongolian capital, via Irkutsk, a Siberian city on Lake Baikal.

Trip takes 17 days in all, from New York to New York, costs $1,951.70, and can be extended to 21 days for an additional $105. Reservations close on August 15.

Those who have already visited this stronghold of yak butter and fermented mare's milk give most enthusiastic reports of their venture (see, for instance, the Spring 1964 issue of the University of Akron Alumnus, devoted to a fascinating commentary by Dr. Norman Auburn). This land, where life vacillates between the nomadic, horseborne tradition of the 12th Century and the monumental city and model farm cooperative of every 20th-century "People's Republic," is not the dish of the usual connoisseur of de-luxe accommodations or the keeper-up with the Joneses. It's what Mr. Reiner bills as "post-graduate" travel—meaning designed to appeal to people who have traveled enough to realize there are more revealing depths to be plumbed wherever you visit than the surface-skimming, nectar-sipping pleasures advertised in the travel posters.

And that has started us wondering: When does a traveler graduate? In our book, one of the loveliest, if most frustrating aspects of travel is its inexhaustibility. The more you see of the world, the more you realize how much more is still to be seen—and, even more tantalizing, how much more there is still to be seen in places you have already been. You don't check off destinations like items on a grocery list and consider them "done." You can revisit the same place time and again and react to it in a completely different way, depending upon a whole battery of different conditions—the time of the world, the season, where you stay, who your companions are, what you do. Paris viewed from the Ritz bar is a completely different world from the one you see out of a Left Bank pension window; the rubbernecking-bus-and-night life set see another Paris from the one that's known to the antique-hunter or the art buff. Since the whole world can be viewed in so many different ways, we submit that a true modern traveler never really "graduates." His interest in the world intensifies the more he sees of it, and more and more he relates what he sees to his own life and philosophy.

This is what dignifies travel in the mid-twentieth century and gives it an urgency it never before had in the history of man. It is not the mere ease and volume of mass movement that we should marvel at, but the potential it represents for peoples learning how to live together even if they don't share the same beliefs.

Western travelers, intrigued by those ideologically opposed countries that are now courting tourists from the outside world (even when they won't let their own people leave home), go forth with a quite different set of travel motivations than ever sent any other generation on their journey.

The scenery, the night life, the golden days of laissez-faire loafing, the food and the wine, all those things that used to be the tourist's prime concern seem way down the list in importance when one visits, say, Budapest, reputedly the gayest of the Communist capitals. Instead, the Hungarians themselves are the sight-seeing highlights. How they dress, what they eat, how they earn their living, what they say under a system which is alien to our own—these are more bemusing to the Westerner than the magnificent rise of these twin cities facing each other across the Danube or the charming Margit Island, which rides the river like a green and misty boat, a place of resort hotels and open-air delights, or the imposing art nouveau Gellert Hotel with its mineral-spring spa and its swimming pool awash with machine-made waves. (The Gellert, it is said, will reign supreme among communist-country hotels until the American-operated Esplanade Intercontinental opens in Zagreb, Yugoslavia, this September.)

In Budapest, there are still the gypsy violins, the wine, and the paprikash at the Gundel Restaurant and the Matyas Pince. Food is plentiful and good in this agricultural land. There are jazz pianists in the boite called Belvarosi and people going through the motions of being amused. Shops seem to be full, but on examination they are all full of almost identical merchandise, except for the antique shops which offer bargain treasures in jewelry and furnishings from more glittering days. For, no matter how earnestly the Westerner tries to regard the scene with an unprejudiced eye, the glamorous old Budapest, with its Heroes Square and marvelous stone mansions along the broad Andrassy Avenue, seems somehow wrapped in a gray over-gauze of quiet. There is a feeling that liveliness here is tentative, that people do not always mean what they say or do what they'd prefer. Nothing really seems to be happening. There's a grandiose Soviet-made television in the hotel room, but no TV program to tune in; the telephone is there but it doesn't work. Most Americans feel this. But it is, we think, evidence of our maturing travel attitudes that, knowing a visit to such a land will not be all wine and roses, so many of us are eager to go, to see for ourselves, devoting vacation time to educating ourselves in the current facts of international life.

It is, incidentally, not at all difficult to go to Hungary these days. From Vienna, Budapest is 50 minutes by plane, four hours by rail, or six hours by car. More romantically, you can make the trip in a four-hour hydrofoil cruise along the Danube, which winds as unblue, alas, as a river can get through a picturesque valley of vineyards and castled hills. Round trip, about $12. Allowing three days or so for getting a Hungarian visit visa, you could make practically a spur-of-the-moment trip. Intropatours, with an office in the new Vienna Intercontinental Hotel, can arrange the details. All reservations must be made through Ibusz, the Hungarian government travel bureau, which functions like Russia's Intourist and furnishes guides, interpreters, and domestic transportation. An itinerary must be planned and everything—transportation, meals and lodging—must be paid in advance. As a gauge to costs, the de luxe Gellert in Budapest gets about $12 a day for a single room with shower and all meals.

A logical route to pursue is to fly to Vienna via Pan American, a flight which runs about $530 round trip Economy Class (with the current bewildering variations in air rates, depending upon the time of week, season, and duration of stay), then on to Hungary, via Budapest. Since Pan Am also flies into Belgrade in Yugoslavia (about $600 round trip, Economy Class), it is now feasible for an American traveler to extend his visits behind the Iron Curtain to Sofia in Bulgaria, Bucharest in Rumania, and return home from Belgrade.

Berlin is also on Pan Am's jet-flight schedule. West Berlin is now directly accessible from New York. Round-trip Economy Class fare, again complicated by many conditions, may run from $411 to $510. From West Berlin, with almost appalling ease, it is possible for temporary American travelers to pass through The Wall, to the dreary, slogan-plastered, still unregenerated Eastern part of the city. With some considerable red tape, you may wander afoot. With less, you may go on a sight-seeing bus. However you do it, to a Westerner the experience has an element of sheer, unbelievable nightmare. Yet it is something one feels duty-bound to do. The curious gray quiet is here, too, the identifying aura of the so-called People's Republics wherever they are. And there is the same look of inertia.

West Berlin, the unhappy sister, glitters by comparison, with its planned-community Hansel Viertel, its brilliant new opera, its always brilliant museums. There are good food and elegance. But if you can visit it unmoved by the drama around you, you've a long way to go to becoming a mature and seasoned traveler. ■

Small intimate details such as this Japanese stone lantern are carefully selected and displayed, although the total garden is of much larger scale. Against a background of fine shrubs, at the base of a large tree, the lantern ostensibly "lights" the way along the garden path. A similar path through a wooded area will be part of the wild garden now being made.

PHOTOGRAPH BY MAYNARD PARKER

The largest feature on the northwestern landscape is also a part of this garden. The pool, path, and the clearing through the trees are all related to this view of 14,408-foot Mount Rainier—some 45 miles away. Planting boxes at the edge of the pool make the form more decorative from a distance and double the beauty of the flowers reflected at close range.

magnificent shrubs grow to perfection here in the mild, moist climate of the northwestern coast. They were carefully chosen for a succession of bloom, from February to July, and were placed where they are best seen when in bloom. Plants in other beds extend the season.

Although the essential framework of the garden is formal, it is not limited to this character. Set among the tall firs is a fine stone lantern and planting of distinctive small shrubs in the naturalistic manner of the Japanese. Plans are now under way for the development of a wild-flower garden to include all the species native to this area of the Northwest. Thus it is that one interest leads to another, and the remodeling process continues.

The total effect of the garden and the house has the elegance of simplicity and beautiful scale, with a touch of the romantic past. The formality of the design is a heritage from a more gracious era. It suits the site, the scale of the buildings, and the taste of the owners.

As the extent of the necessary remodeling became evident, there were thoughts that it might be best to take the house down and build anew. But the craftsmanship of the woodwork on the interior could never be duplicated, and the blending of the past and the present provides a depth of meaning that could be attained in no other way. ■

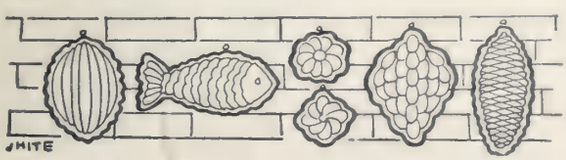
They enjoy being in the kitchen, if only to converse. When she prepared a luncheon for as many as 75 persons (as she did for her daughter's wedding), the kitchen seemed cluttered and untidy. Even when giving a small dinner party for six or eight persons, there never seemed to be enough space for platters and dishes.

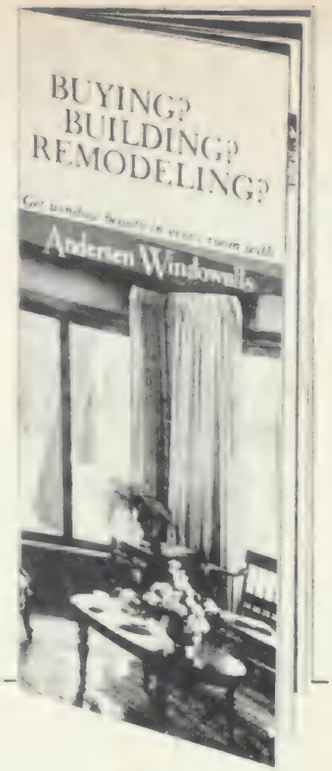
When she came to grips with her specific wants and needs, after hours of discussion with the designer, Donn Sheets, it was evident that a room with plenty of space to move around in was essential.

The solution began with the unit that occupies center-stage in the kitchen. Its round, wood-block counter is perfect for chopping, pounding, mixing. Under this counter is cabinet space that holds mixing bowls, measuring cups, and such, plus an open section that accommodates a stool. There's also a shelf for the telephone. This is a good place to plan meals. Cookbooks are on the shelves above, within easy reach. This is also Mr. Bryson's favorite spot when cooking is in progress. He sits here with a cup of coffee and watches the entire procedure, yet he is out of the area where cooking is done.

Several years ago, when she was preparing to write the book Curtain Up At Sardi's, Mrs. Bryson worked in the kitchen of Sardi's restaurant for three months. It was there she discovered the advantage to a chef of having tools and pans —that were in constant use—out in the open and within reach. She carried this idea into her own kitchen, where everything used daily is easy to see and grasp. Near the cooking center, open shelves hold herbs, spices, and seasonings. Covered canisters nest at the back or end of counters.



To insure plenty of storage space, the open area leading to the rear door of the kitchen has been lined with cabinets. Some hold china and glassware. Others have been detailed to hold everything from children's boots and heavy coats to cleaning equipment.



Arrangements for eating were deliberately omitted in the planning of the kitchen, since two eating areas are nearby—the dining room and a breakfast room.

Everything in the kitchen was chosen for good performance, capacity, and ease of maintenance. Counters are stainless steel or wood. One bank of storage cabinets is metal. Others are beautifully grained wood, giving the room a mellow look.

Well lighted by both day and night, this is a kitchen to inspire good cooking. After working in it for two years, Mrs. Bryson says that she still gets a "lift" every time she walks into it. ■

Bedroom ell, formerly a mere alcove (see right), acquired 32 sq. ft. more space when upstairs hall was shortened. The procedure eliminated a hall closet, throwing this space into the bedroom. The new door opens straight on from the hall instead of from the side. Such doing away with devious traffic lanes and straightening out approaches has been largely responsible for making this Victorian town house efficient for contemporary living.

Free and open look of entrance hall and living room was effected by changing the sizes of existing wall openings and doing away with doors. But visual spaciousness throughout the whole house is further emphasized by painting all walls, ceilings, and woodwork a flat white, which is a good light-reflective choice in a narrow house that needs all the light it can get. For the same reason, the halls and the stairs are carpeted in a bright, light-reflecting gold color.

PHOTOGRAPH BY EZRA STOLLER ASSOCIATES

Along the window wall, well-lighted marble counter with sink under windows at each end adds to the convenience of the kitchen. Below the counter are an automatic ice maker, dishwasher, and storage cabinets.

Working with designer Robert Caigon, the simplest solution requiring no structural changes, was to remove the old doors and replace them with flush doors of ponderosa pine. When these were stained to match the wood paneling selected for walls, the illusion of a continuous paneled wall was achieved. With all its custom-made cabinets stained in matching seafoam green, the walls were coordinated.

Limited wall space was still a problem. The only usable space in the one wall with four doors was where open shelves had been. This was just wide enough to accommodate a double oven. By borrowing a few inches from the back of a foyer closet that backed onto this wall, sufficient depth was gained.

Two large closets on this wall helped solve the problem of storage area. What had been merely enclosed spaces were now carefully detailed—one for cleaning tools and bulk supplies and the other as a walk-in pantry.

By keeping everything below counter at the window wall, the entire room looks out on a magnificent view of Long Island Sound with a sandy beach in the foreground where the children play. The automatic icemaker is in this area, and also the dishwasher. A sink at each end of the long stretch of marble counter enables two people to work here when necessary.

The cooking center was moved from the windows to the brick wall (uncovered during remodeling) that backs up to the dining room, an ideal spot for the cooking area. The electric cooktop is surrounded by a stainless steel counter, useful in serving. Ample cabinets above and below provide point-of-use storage. Taking a cue from master chefs, iron hooks were installed on the wall back of the range to hold pots and pans within easy reach.

In addition to the 20 cu. ft. two-door commercial refrigerator on this wall, a second refrigerator and a large freezer, in the kitchen but out of sight, provide many additional feet of cold storage for fresh and frozen foods. No convenience has been overlooked.

Furnishings include a handsome oak dining table and chairs as well as a Yorkshire cupboard with favorite antique porcelains that add a nice touch of color. These, the handmade iron hinges on the doors, and the Early American chandelier all help in giving the kitchen a pleasing charm and warmth. ■

KEEP AMERICA BEAUTIFUL

AFTER BEFORE

Screen fence of wood saplings goes to trellis height to block view of adjacent building. Original concrete ledge is used as base for planting bed. Fountain provides the shimmer of running water and pleasant sound. Plain background accents form of plants.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY HOWARD GRAFF

False walls make a true garden

This is the bottom of an air shaft—and looked the part —until the new walls, new floor, trellis, and plants turned it into a gem of a tiny garden

•The remarkable conversion of this small cubicle (the floor area is less than a 10 feet square) was accomplished quickly and effectively with false walls. The original hodgepodge of windows, drain pipes, and unrelated shapes and materials have all been screened from view with the rich brown textured surface of insulating cork, a fence wall of wooden saplings, and a floor of used brick.

A trellis was used to create a ceiling. It is open to let through the rain and what little sunlight there is. But the covering is sufficient to create a visual barrier overhead. By thus reducing the apparent height of the area, it's breadth seems greater by comparsion.

The garden is obviously small, but by keeping it in scale with itself, simplifying the design, and unifying the materials, it does not seem cramped. There's room here for half a dozen people to gather in the open air. Gardens are rare in this mid-Manhattan location. It is well worth the effort to make one wherever possible.

The designer, Leslie Larson, included the fountain not only to add the sight and sound of running water, but to serve as a subtle space divider, and as a piece of sculpture. The wooden trays are made of teak. The flow of water is adjusted to cascade from tray to tray down to the bed of gravel from where it is recirculated. ■

BEFORE AFTER

Folding chairs are easy to move in and out, and to store inside where kept when not used. Plants are in pots. When the Manhattan soot-fall begins to take its toll, they are replaced with fresh ones and rested in greenhouse. Gravel bed takes the overflowing water.

Plan shows how small the space is and its relation to the inside area. Brick ledge of the gravel-filled planter is wide enough to sit on, and four chairs can be used here. The fountain divides floor area to give it interest, but it is small enough to be in scale.

Enjoy the pleasures of fall color

By ELSIE L. SCULTHORP

■ It seems to me as important to select plants that will give us foliage color in the fall as to select them for their flowers. At no added cost, we may have the glory of dogwood leaves, the burning flame of the sugar maple, and the brilliance of a euonymus to highlight our garden scene long after flowers have gone. The bright display of scarlet, orange, and yellow is nature's annual parting gift to the garden. In the fall there is an embarrassment of riches. We must practice some restraint — there should always be masses of green behind the occasional flash of brilliant color.

In my garden by the sea, nature has been very generous in providing gorgeous autumn color.

If nature has not been so generous with you, you may supplement her efforts with color of your own choice. Place it where it will create enjoyable effects.

As my garden is well protected, its colorings are mine to admire for a long time. In a more exposed place, the color would not last as well. It is a delight to watch the gradual change and development of the autumn color.

What causes autumn color? A substance called chlorophyll, continually produced in leaves, makes them green. In addition to this green coloring matter, two sorts of pigment are present in the leaves: the carotins—yellow pigments and anthocyanins—or red pigments. In autumn, the plant's growth reaches a certain stage when little or no chlorophyll is manufactured and what remains in the leaves is gradually destroyed. Then the yellow or red pigments have a chance to assert themselves, and fall color results. Many circumstances affect this change—they vary with the individual plant and with the weather. It has been noted that poorer soils produce the most brilliantly colored foliage, and that plenty of rain in the fall, lack of freezing weather, and the amount of sunlight all cause variations in color. This explains why plants rarely show exactly the same color each year. Usually the best fall color is produced when the plant gets plenty of sunshine, a point to remember when placing your fall-color purchases.

Plants growing in low or swampy places usually change color first. Cold air, which is needed to produce fall color, usually settles in such areas, and in addition, dampness, which helps to produce fall color, is usually present. Here, also, the plants are protected and get the needed warmth during the day. Along eastern roadsides, clumps of swamp maples show the first fall color, their leaves bright red, like bonfires along the way.

Not only does one get great pleasure from a dazzling display of autumn color, but sprays of bright leaves make lovely bouquets for the house.

Such bouquets can be kept for a long time if you will mix a pint or so of ordinary glycerin with the water in your container. The leaves absorb this mixture and can be preserved indefinitely. This works particularly well with thin leaves, such as beech, which, if cut when green and put into this mixture, turn a lovely golden color. Once I tried it with sprays of magnolia leaves, and as a result had a handsome bronzy-gold bouquet in my hall for months.

YELLOW FOLIAGE

Eastern redbud (Cercis canadensis). Small tree of irregular growth, beautiful heart - shape leaves, pink - lavender flowers. There's also a white flowered kind.

Ginkgo or Maidenhair - tree (Ginkgo biloba). One of the most beautiful and interesting of trees with small fan-shape leaves. Plant only male trees, as fruit on female trees has an unpleasant odor.

Katsura - tree (Cercidiphyllum japonicum). One of the loveliest of trees, wide spreading when mature. Grows to 60 feet. Rounded heart-shape leaves like Cercis. Fruits: small pods along limbs. Branches are most unusual.

NEW LOW-COST ESCALIFT

Shadblow (Amelanchier canadensis). Native small tree, usually several-stemmed. Handsome bark, small white flowers in clusters.

Silver-bell (Halesia monticola). Lovely small tree with pendant white flowers.

Striped maple (Acer pensylvanicum). Not a particularly good garden tree, but useful for edge of woodland. Green bark vertically striped white—lovely in winter. To 35 feet.

Thornless honeylocust (Gleditsia triacanthos var. inermis). Lovely tree that casts light shade.

Tulip tree (Liriodendron tulipifera). Interesting tulip - shaped flowers, greenish-white, pale orange band at base. Unusually shaped leaves. Grows to 75 feet tall.

Yellow-wood (Cladrastis lutea). White flowers in foot-long panicles like wisteria. To 45 feet tall.

RED FOLIAGE

Dogwood (Cornus florida). Fall color glorious scarlet. Beautiful flowers in spring, white, shades of pink. Showy red berries in clusters in fall. To 30 feet.

Franklinia (Franklinia alatamaha). Often shrubby to 25 feet. Lovely white flowers.

Hall crab-apple (Malus halliana spontanea). One of the very few crabapples with fall color. Flowers white, buds deep pink, small red fruit.

Hawthorn (Crataegus). Many kinds. Good garden trees with white flowers; most have red fruits.

Japanese dogwood (Cornus kousa). Also called Chinese dogwood. Blooms much later than our native dogwood, with larger flower heads. Fruits like large strawberries.

Mountain-ash or Rowan tree (Sorbus aucuparia). Flowers white, large clusters of red or orange fruit, lovely red-orange fall color. To 30 feet.

Siebold viburnum (Viburnum sieboldii). A small tree, to 25 feet, when mature. Flat clusters of white flowers.

Sour gum (Nyssa sylvatica). Brilliant red foliage. Beautiful native tree, with horizontal irregular branching.

Sweet gum (Liquidambar styraciflua). To 75 feet. Beautiful star-shape leaves.

Shrubs with showy fall color.

YELLOW FOLIAGE

Christmasberry (Photinia villosa). White flowers like hawthorn are followed by red berries in clusters.

Five-leaf aralia (Acanthopanax). Not often seen, but good. Graceful form with small heads of creamy flowers, will grow anywhere, lovely fall color. From 4 to 6 feet tall.

Fringetree (Chionanthus virginica). Shrubby, to 10 feet, can be pruned to make a beautiful small tree. Greenish-white flowers literally cover the bush.

Ironwood (Parrotia persica). Tall shrub, good for background.

Witch-hazel (Hamamelis virginiana). Native shrub with small yellow flowers in October-November, and golden fall foliage.

RED FOLIAGE

Barberry (Berberis thunbergi). There are many handsome kinds. B. thunbergi has glorious red autumn color, with bright red fruit lasting all winter. About 3 feet.

Burningbush (Euonymus alatus compactus). Rosy red fall color, unusual and very beautiful. About 4 feet.

Redvein enkianthus (Enkianthus campanulatus). Bell-shaped flowers in pendant clusters, creamy, veined red. One of the handsomest shrubs. Grows to 6 feet.

Rock cotoneaster (Cotoneaster horizontalis). Prostrate branches in flat sprays. Pinkish-white flowers, bright red fruit.

Smoketree (Rhus Cotinus). To 10 feet tall. Lovely fall color.

A BRILLIANT RED VINE

Virginia creeper (Parthenocissus quinquefolia). Handsome foliage turns to a beautiful color in the fall. ■

Why not have all the cut flowers you want?

It can be done if you choose the right flowers—and plant them in the right place

By ELSIE L. SCULTHORP

• Choosing the right kind is easy. There's nothing to surpass annuals for cutting, and on page 211 is a list of the best for this purpose.

But when it comes to deciding where they should be grown, the easy place is not always best. Too often the permanent flower beds and borders must also serve for cutting. But borders are usually in prominent places, and for fear of spoiling the garden effect, we hesitate to cut bouquets for the house and for friends as freely as we would like.

It is best to have permanent plantings for outside color and a separate garden where flowers may be picked often and used generously.

Of course, when you need a few perennials to round out the form and color of a flower arrangement, you can cut them here and there from a border without leaving a gaping hole. But for the basic supply of indoor color, a cutting garden of annuals is best.

They are wonderfully easy to grow. If you like starting plants from seed, one packet will give you all you'll need of a kind—with some left over for your neighbors. If you don't want to grow them from seed, many kinds can be bought from the nursery in flats all ready to set out.

Annuals develop quickly and soon flower profusely. They are charming and various in form and color. Many are showy, and some have a long season of bloom. There are early and late sorts, in all sizes from dwarf edgings to those of medium height and very tall. There are also climbing kinds. As an early writer puts it: ". . . Of so many sweet flowers to chuse the best, it is hard, seeing they all be so good."

The more frequently you cut your annuals, the more flowers they will produce. If flowers aren't cut, they go to seed and their season is ended. Pick them freely to promote more bloom. An old-fashioned name for zinnia is "cut-and-come-again": this can be applied to many other annuals.

Buy the best seed you can. Don't buy packets of mixed colors unless you can't get the flowers you want any other way. Many good seedsmen, because of popular demand, now sell flower seed with the colors packaged separately. If you're a beginner, choose the easy kinds. An evening spent with seed catalogs will help you decide which are best for your needs.

Most annuals bloom best in the sun, but a few—such as nicotiana and balsam—will bloom well in partial shade and reseed themselves freely.

The term "cutting garden" has a utilitarian connotation. It is not usually considered as part of the garden proper, or even as a place of beauty, but is often thought of as a few rows of flowers in a vegetable garden or behind a fence or garage. You go there only when you want some flowers.

There's no reason why a cutting garden can't be in any of these places, but perhaps we should revise our thinking and try to do more interesting things with it. It's a blaze of color in season and can be a credit to any garden.

As to the best location for a cutting garden, there are two points of view: You may put it where it is pretty much out of sight, and therefore requires less careful layout and attention; or it may be a featured part of the garden scene.

In most climates the plants themselves can be counted on for less than half the year. If the planting area is to be in daily view, the beds should have a design of their own that will be attractive when the flowers are gone.

Attractive and well-proportioned raised beds of brick or wood can be of interest from the time the seed rows are set out until the last flowers are harvested. In the off-season the beds can be mulched with a handsome material such as wood chips or cocoa-bean hulls. A few potted hardy dwarf evergreens may be plunged into the beds for winter interest.

If beds are not raised, they may be edged with brick, with 2 by 4's on edge, or perhaps given added interest with a border of plants such as dwarf boxwood or azaleas.

Simple shapes are best for planting beds. They should be arranged so you can get around them easily and reach all the flowers for cultivation, fertilizing, and gathering.

If one color is used in each bed, you'll get a more brilliant effect. Color counts for more in masses than when scattered. To increase the usefulness of this area, each bed may be underplanted with spring bulbs, which add to the length of the blooming season and also are good for cutting.

No two locations are alike. Each differs in size, layout, and exposure to sun and wind; no rules can be laid down for placement of the garden. For masses of flowers, a sunny spot and good fertile well-drained soil are musts. Once you have enjoyed the beauty of a productive cutting garden, it is a small luxury you aren't likely to give up.

Following is a list of the best annuals for cutting:

To 1 foot tall:

Pansy (Viola tricolor); in a variety of colors.

DON'T WAIT TO INHERIT SPODE

This is Lowestoft, the famous blue/gray stone ware developed by Josiah Spode II in 1805. It was the first non-Chinese "china," since it came into being to supply replacements for the dinnerware that had been brought in from the Orient. Newburyport is typical of the old China Trade patterns. Edged in gold, its centered cartouche gives the effect of a coat of arms. Write for Booklet 43.

You get a feeling for Karastan® and yo

AMERICA'S FINEST POWER-LOOMED RUG

't forget it

You pressed your nose against a dream once and saw a castle there. This evening you walk in the memory made on Karastan. Softening reality from wall to wall: your Lorraine broadloom with every wool loop acting as though it were done by hand. Regent Gold at $15.95* a square yard is just one of its moments. And up above a Tiempo Colonial rug looped with wool in a tradition our golden west inherited from sunny Spain. Santa White and Gold is just one of twelve suggestions. And a 9′ x 12′ at $210* is just one of seven sizes. Why these two of all the Karastans you might have had? You just had a feeling about them.

How Kroehler uses radio waves to make this Mediterranean design as strong as Gibraltar

At one place in the factory where Kroehler's new Del Morro Collection is made, you can hold a burned-out fluorescent tube in your hands, without any electrical connection, and it will burn brightly.

Without going too deeply into scientific details, the explanation is high-frequency radio waves. They come from the Kroehler electronic equipment that shoots them through wood as easily as daylight goes through a window—to dry glue as tough as nails and almost instantly.

This is only one of quite a few Kroehler methods for bonding wood to wood, because different jobs require different techniques. But we wanted to tell you about it, because it not only contributes to sound construction but also saves manufacturing time and gives us another important way to bring you good furniture at modest prices.

There are many little stories like this at Kroehler, and each of them is a part of the reason why more people choose Kroehler for their homes than any other furniture in the world.

From the Award-Winning Kroehler Design Center

Avant, Classic, Cape Cod, Valentine Seaver, Signature, Galaxy and Sleep-or-Lounge Designs are all Kroehler fashion lines. Among them you'll find all of today's most popular styles—Contemporary, Traditional, Early American, Modern and Provincial. They're all created by the Award-Winning Kroehler Design Center, all reasonably priced, and all sold at good stores from coast to coast.

Kroehler Mfg. Co., General Offices: Naperville, Ill. In Canada: Stratford, Ont.

There are 27 different bedroom pieces in the Del Morro Collection. Like the dining room pieces, all of them are very reasonably priced.

Del Morro borrows its aesthetic appeal from Mediterranean art in many ways—the Gothic finials, the Byzantine pointed arches, the Florentine-style grillwork in the hardware, and the barrel-type hinges characteristic of Spain. There are 13 dining room pieces designed to fit any size or space requirements.

chosen by more people KROEHLER than any other brand of furniture in the world

We made this sterling silver teapot circa 1798.

(It's not for sale.)

El Grandee, 4-piece place setting $39.25

This sterling silver spoon was made at Towle yesterday.

(No extra charge for the 166 years of craftsmanship.)

ACTUALLY, the Towle silver tradition is over two hundred and seventy-four years old. It was born in Newburyport, Massachusetts, and Towle continues in the same place today. You rarely find tradition like that anymore.

That's why there's something extra in today's Towle sterling. You can see it. You can feel it. You can sense it. For, like its ancestors, every Towle piece is meant to be admired...and used. Use your Towle sterling for fancy dinners. Or family suppers. Put it in your dishwasher. Towle sterling is as practical as it is beautiful. (Use it regularly and it requires very little polishing.)

Take a good look at Towle before you buy. Study its varied elegance. Pick up a piece. Balance it. Examine its perfect design, its grace, its grandeur that could come only from the oldest silvermaking tradition in America: it dates from 1690.

Doesn't our Italian-type table look great as a blonde?

Thank Lane, not nature. We have a way of turning dark tables into dizzy blondes. And you know there's nothing more provocative than a dark, elegant, classic, formal table suddenly blossoming forth as a champagne blonde. How do we do our blonding? It's a dark secret. Is it true, blonde tables have more fun? Pick from 18 Sonnet tables and find out. They start from $49.95.* They all come in beautifully veneered mahogany too, if you can't bear change.

*Slightly higher in the west.

It's possible. No really fine ceramic is unbreakable. It's just that now you needn't worry about it, because we guarantee* your CENTURA® tableware against breakage. In fact, that's what CENTURA tableware is—the first fine ceramic without a breakage worry. How fine is it? Well, CENTURA tableware has a surface so smooth that it's a breeze to keep it sparkling clean. And you can freeze and cook in the serving pieces. And its new, carefree beauty is for you to enjoy with everyday meals as well as formal candlelight occasions. And CENTURA tableware looks and feels and even "rings" like the finest ceramic setting you can buy. Why not? It probably is.

VINYL FLOORS

Let yourself go with new Kentile Bamboo Solid Vinyl! This strikingly beautiful tile is completely at home with any decor—modern or traditional. It's beautiful to look at, but is it comfortable?

It should be! However, even modern homeowners may suffer from one or more of the six heating and cooling problems below.

Although architectural styles have changed greatly over the years, many people still depend on just one thermostat to control comfort throughout their home. This can't help but create problem areas.

1. Separate living and sleeping areas obviously require different temperatures—warm and relaxing in the living area—cool and comfortable for sleeping.
2. If your home has large glass areas, the inside temperature changes every time the sun, wind or outside temperature varies . . . even with double paned windows.
3. In any split level, warm air tends to rise to upper levels leaving cooler air in the lower rooms.
4. Rooms over unheated areas, such as a garage, often have cold floors and walls.
5. A finished basement, because it is below ground level, has far different temperature needs from the rest of the house.
6. With a spread-out floor plan, sun, shade and wind in different areas of the house can cause widely differing heating and cooling requirements.

The answer to all six of them is zone control . . . dividing your home into two or more areas that you can keep at different temperatures to suit your family's needs.

Zoning is simple, too! With a hydronic (hot water) system, all you need is a thermostat for each zone, and a zone valve to control the hot water flow. With a forced air system, all you need is a damper motor and thermostat to control the air distribution to each zone.

The cost of this equipment depends, of course, on how many zones you need. In most cases . . . just pennies a day. It will give you the extra comfort only zoning can provide. And, you'll probably save fuel, too!

Want to know more about zoning? Write Honeywell, Dept. HB10-21, Minneapolis, Minnesota 55408 for free literature. Or, call your heating or plumbing contractor. He'll help you zone more comfort into your home.

SMARTEST MOVE WE EVER MADE

After too many "just-married" furniture mistakes, Bill and I finally came to our senses. Without question, it's Thomasville . . . eventually, for every room in the house. We're beginning with a classic style that will blend, no matter how our design tastes develop through the years. And with Thomasville's happy combination of fine quality, wide variety and attractive prices, we'll be able to add new pieces as we need them. We may not always be in the house . . . as Bill's job gets more and more important, our homes will too. But our beautiful Thomasville furniture will keep pace . . . what a great feeling to know you're off to the right start!

Thomasville has what you're looking for . . . Early American to Contemporary, Classic to Provincial. Only 25 cents to Dept. C-5 will bring you their booklet.

Petproof strength is but one gladdening virtue of a Harvard Bed Frame. Add a box spring and mattress and you have a modern Hollywood bed that eliminates creaky slats, bulky side rails and a space-taking footboard. A bed that moves with a slight knee push instead of a slight back strain. A bed that never mars floors. And beneath it all, a frame that is unconditionally warranteed to never let you down. And you thought long wear was the only reason to buy nylon.

But then you discover carpet of plump Cumuloft® nylon. No ordinary nylon, and you'll be able to tell. The colors are richer. The texture is warmer. The touch is softer. Carpets of plump nylon meet mill and Chemstrand quality standards that start so high, a lot of ordinary nylon pile carpets will seem skinny and skimpy by comparison. Doubt it? Still think nylon is merely the hardest-wearing carpet you can buy? Run a hand over some carpeting with the big blue Cumuloft C. See what you think then. It takes so little space to get that second bathroom or powder room

These American-Standard "Space-Makers" tuck away into an area as small as 4'x4'

With American-Standard fixtures, and without overburdening your budget, you can put an extra bathroom or a powder room in a nook or a cranny. Perhaps a space at the end of a hallway or an extra closet.

Six designs for powder rooms and second bathrooms are featured on the opposite page. Check the floor space each requires and look around your house for a similar space you can spare. Then check the prices in the captions at the right, and you'll see for yourself why American-Standard is the pacemaker as well as the "space maker" in convenient, modern bathrooms and powder rooms.

Here's why you're wiser to insist on American-Standard

All the tubs, and some of the lavatories shown here, are cast iron, with acid-resisting, triple-thick enamel. Other lavatories and all the toilets are easy-to-clean vitreous china. The toilets are reverse trap toilets, more sanitary in use, easier to clean. All have thorough siphon jet flushing action. An exclusive positive flushing mechanism ends water waste and handle jiggling. All faucets are no drip, no leak, washerless faucets!

A–4'x4'
AMERICAN-STANDARD Elongated Cadet toilet with a longer bowl is even more sanitary in use and easier to keep clean. $65.95*. Space-saving new Minnette corner lavatory of vitreous china, $49.80*. Single-lever washerless faucet always leaves one hand free. $37.95*.

B–4'x5'
AMERICAN-STANDARD Glenwall off-the-floor toilet makes floor cleaning easy, with no pedestal to clean around. $88.90*. New cast iron Spacelyn lavatory fits into a counter that's only 16 inches deep. $25.00*. Easy-to-use single-control Push-Pull faucet, $29.75*.

C–4'x5'
AMERICAN-STANDARD Glenwall toilet, with satin-chrome lever. $90.35*. Gracelyn lavatory has own storage cabinet. Top is one easy-to-clean piece of vitreous china. Monogram washerless faucets, with satin Chromard finish are mounted on slant-back panel so fingers drip into bowl. Complete, $247.30*.

D–5'x7'

This is a vinyl floor. You don't believe it? Thank you.

If you think a bricklayer built it, we're flattered. Actually, it's Luran Vinyl Antique Brick. All the warmth and charm of weathered brick sealed deep under solid vinyl—a wear surface so tough, this floor is guaranteed for life!* And thanks to Sandura's unique Vinylweld® process, 6 foot widths can be welded wall-to-wall with no open seams to trap dirt and water. A final touch: scientific dimensional embossing masks most accidental indentations. You can put Antique Brick in any room in your home, including the basement. Also Antique White and Antique Beige. Other Authentic Reproductions in Luran: Unglazed Morocco Tile, English Oak Plank, Vermont Flagstone. For more information, write: Sandura Co., Dept. HB-10, Benson-East, Jenkintown, Pa.

Luran Vinyl Floors
By Sandura, fine floors for 40 years.

*Lifetime Guarantee. Sandura Company will furnish new material to replace Luran Regency or Luran Imperial vinyl flooring that becomes worn out in normal use in your home under these conditions: 1. Any area of the vinyl wear surface is worn through to the backing during your lifetime and during the time you, the original purchaser, continue to occupy the home in which the flooring is originally installed. 2. The flooring is installed and maintained according to Sandura recommendations. On board floors it is necessary to install over underlayment plywood unless boards are less than 3 in. wide, in which case flooring felt may be used. 3. Sandura's liability does not extend to the cost or cost of installation. 4. Claim must be accompanied by the original bill of sale to claimant and approved by Sandura Co. prior to replacement.

Celanese patterns your home after Wedgwood

WEDGWOOD—the famous name in fine china.
Its patterns have graced the palaces, great homes and museums of Britain, all Europe and the world since the mid-18th century.

Now Celanese has been granted the right to use renowned Wedgwood patterns as inspiration for new decorative fabrics with Celanese Contemporary Fibers.

To view the patterns at their source, a group of leading manufacturers flew to England.
There, at Josiah Wedgwood and Sons, Ltd., the archives were opened to them.
From treasured originals and rare antiquities they chose motifs for fabrics to pattern your home today.
Fabrics made with Celanese fibers that best reproduce such grandeur.
Fibers that match beauty with proficiency—
Celanese Acetate and Fortrel polyester.

Fabrics in the Wedgwood Collection are designed to go together.
Decorate each room with a different pattern. Your whole scheme will harmonize from one room to the next.
See brilliant examples of these fabrics on the next six pages.

When you're a homely little lamp, you have to have lots of personality... and be very helpful

...then people will take you home and love you!

You'd never believe this coltish-looking little lamp could find such an indispensable place in your life.

Read in bed without disturbing the spouse. Sew while the family watches TV. Fix the car. Paint (you see colors true-to-hue!) Manicure. Shave. Study. Work at hobbies. Tensor-Lite is like concentrated daylight, for your own personal use, anytime.

What makes it possible? Electronic miniaturization: High-intensity illumination in a confined beam . . . (the Hi-Lo switch provides up to the equivalent of a 200-watt conventional desk lamp) . . . that can be directed exactly where you want it, and only where you need it. It's pure white, glare-free.

Tensor-Lite can be used anywhere; the extra-long cord gives wide reach. It bends every which way. It travels: folds compactly to pocket size.

Tensor-Lite will do so many things for you, it won't be long before you'll find it the irreplaceable light of your life.

The Tensor-Lite shown (#5975) has a LIFETIME GUARANTEE against damage in normal use. In neutral finish, $17.50. Other models from $9.95. You'll find them in department, stationery and specialty stores. Stop in and see if you can resist owning one.

"But I must have a Kirsch rod," I cried.

"Let's not become overly emotional about this," the clerk suggested coldly. "A rod is a rod. And as it happens, we carry our own brand."

What brand's that? I asked.

"Our own," he repeated.

Who makes them? I asked suspiciously.

"Who knows?" he answered.

Look, I said. I want a rod that's backed by a firm with a 57-year reputation for superlative quality. And I want variety—styles to go with modern and provincial and traditional and Early American and mid-Victorian and Oriental decors. I want a rod that's made by experts. And sold by experts.

"Listen, lady," the clerk said, "a rod is a . . ."

And I want a rod that will last for years and years and years.

"What's that magazine you're carrying?" the clerk asked in an obvious effort to change the subject.

The Kirsch Guide to Window Beauty, I said. 96 pages of fabulous decorating ideas. All you've got to do to get one is mail Kirsch the end tie coupon. That's what I did. And now I know all about it.

"All about what?" he asked.

Why, window beauty, of course.

"I give up," the clerk said in a weary sort of way. "You Kirsch customers are all alike. The fellow you want to see is right around the corner."

So I hurried over, picked out this new Kirsch "Americana" Ivoreen rod, and lived happily ever after.

Moral: Kirsch customers may be all alike. But rods aren't. Have the courage of your convictions.

Insist on Kirsch.

How to be overweight...and beautiful

Many people want their sterling extra heavy. They like the feel of added precious silver in their hand. For this reason (and to satisfy our aesthetic souls) Lunt makes some of the heaviest sterling silver patterns you can buy. But naturally you don't choose them by the ounce or pound want design that is timeless in its good taste. You want design that is made to last and glow even lovelier as time goes by. You want, very likely, one of the superb solid sterling patterns by Lunt. For however you judge it—practically or poetically—you could never make a wiser choice.

Celotex adds a 4th dimension to living ...the contentment of a Quiet-Conditioned Home

It's like stepping into another world . . . a pleasant "4th dimension" where nerve-racking noise is absent. You feel relaxed, free from tensions, better able to enjoy the activities of modern family living.

Quiet Conditioned Living begins with acoustical ceilings by Celotex. They absorb up to 70% of noise that strikes them. Easy to install over existing ceilings, or in new rooms. Choose from a decorator's dream collection of exclusive Celotex patterns at your building materials dealer.

And in new homes, walls and floors now can be Quiet Conditioned —with advanced building systems using Soundstop* Board, Celo-Rok® Gypsum Wallboard, and other Celotex® products. Annoying room-to-room noise is greatly reduced. And more outdoor noise is kept outside.

When you buy, build, or remodel, be sure to give your family the extra comfort and privacy of Celotex Quiet Conditioned Living. You'll be glad you did.

Heirloom Quality Pianos Since 1896 / Granite Falls, N. C.

This is Amtico's flooring designer, Nancy Mayer, at Il Campidoglio in Rome.

This is our vinyl tile: Amtico Travertine. What a coincidence!

Nancy Mayer did it.
She captured all the warmth and beauty of age old travertine marble in Amtico Travertine floor tile.
Both solid vinyl and vinyl asbestos.
Nancy travels all over the world searching for unusual textures and patterns that she can translate into vinyl.
She found Travertine in Rome.
The pattern of the floor at Il Campidoglio was so lovely, Nancy decided to duplicate it in the room above.
Difficult? No.

She combined Amtico Travertine with Textura Mosaic vinyl tile.
With a little imagination and Amtico vinyl tile, you can create custom designed patterns, too.
Send for a free sample of Amtico Travertine and see the actual tile in person.
That's the only way you can appreciate its remarkable depth, texture and richness. Otherwise, you'd have to go a long way to find such beauty and excitement in a floor. To Il Campidoglio, to be exact.

SEDIMENT. The deposit, or precipitate of crystals and other solids that most wines tend to throw as they are aged in bottle. It is as natural a part of an old wine as the peel is part of an orange or the shell part of an egg. It should never be confused with cloudiness or haziness or lack of clarity, all of which are grave faults, and often indicate that a wine is not fit to drink. Sediment, on the contrary, is not a defect in any sense: it is a sign of bottle-age, and a fine red wine that claims to be old and has no sediment may well be regarded with suspicion. In the case of white wines, sediment usually takes the form of colorless crystals of cream of tartar, which is the base of baking powder. These are tasteless and harmless and will often disappear if the wine is shaken and then left for a week or so in a warm room. If white and powdery rather than colorless, some pectins and albumens from the grape are probably also present. Red wine sediment is more copious and more complex, and sometimes forms a mask or crust over the inside of the bottle. It is composed of tannins, pigments, and minute quantities of the mineral salts normally present in wine. In any case, sediment should settle fairly rapidly if the bottle is disturbed and should simply be left in the bottle when the clear wine is poured off. Certain very full-bodied red wines (Hermitage and Barolo, for example, in a great vintage) throw so heavy a sediment that they must often be decanted and rebottled after two or three years of cellar-aging before they are shipped.

SERVING. So much pretentious etiquette, not to say ritual, has come to surround the service of wine, that many eager potential wine drinkers become frightened and discouraged at the start. Most of this is sheer abracadabra and nonsense. Rules do exist, but it is safe to say that any person of taste would discover these for himself in the course of a month of daily wine-drinking. The real rules are based on common sense, anyway. Thus, the host is served first—principally so that he can sniff or taste the wine and be sure that it is good before it is offered to his guests. Thus, white wines and vins rosés are chilled—for the sufficient reason that ninety-nine people out of a hundred find them more refreshing and agreeable when so served. Thus, red wine is traditionally served with red meat—because most people find that the two complement one another. Thus, sweet wines, even as strawberry shortcake and chocolate pudding, belong at the end of a meal, not the beginning.

When several wines are served at a meal, which is not often, these days, the problem is possibly a little more complicated, but here, too, common sense can teach us. A less good wine should precede a better one; a lighter wine should precede a heavier one; a drier wine should precede a sweeter one. When a meal includes both fish and meat,

The sofa shown here is one of an almost infinite variety of sofas, love seats and sectional pieces that can be made to your order through the Heritage "Selection 120" program. (details below).

HERITAGE® UPHOLSTERY

In the Heritage upholstery catalogue you'll find some 65 sofas and 57 chairs. And now, a new Heritage service lets you "custom design" your own sofa, love seat, or sectional pieces to your own personal specifications.

The name Heritage in furniture has long been recognized as a hallmark of design artistry and superior craftsmanship. But there is no single kind of furniture on which the name Heritage will be more important to you than on your upholstered chair or sofa. The Heritage upholstery collection is unique both in range of choice and the meticulous attention given every piece to insure lasting pleasure.

Engineering for Comfort

Good design at Heritage means not only an upholstered piece that is elegant and inviting, but one that is comfortable and relaxing. Correct proportions are not only essential for good appearance, but are equally important elements of comfort. Every Heritage chair and sofa is subjected to continuing study and refinement to achieve the correct relative proportion between cushion and arm height, depth, pitch of seat and back, and the proper degree of softness or firmness desirable for construction of cushions and pillows.

What's Inside

Heritage designs are translated into finished products utilizing both the highest standards of traditional handcraftsmanship and the most advanced scientific techniques known in the development and testing of materials and methods. All materials used in Heritage upholstery are the finest procurable. Heritage frames are of select kiln dried hackberry—one of the most durable woods known. They are extra thick not only for strength but also for your convenience in possible future reupholstering. On every piece you will find the maximum use of springs and webbing (spring coils are hand tied and anchored eight ways with the finest quality imported Italian hemp twine). Perhaps more eloquent of Heritage craftsmanship than technical facts is the appearance of your Heritage upholstery before covering—frames smoothly finished, all elements carefully trimmed—a study in an almost forgotten kind of personal pride.

The Heritage Look

Every possible contour of the original Heritage design is shaped or carved into the inner frame itself. Only in this way can the final beautiful tailored appearance of Heritage upholstery be achieved. Extra assurance, too, that Heritage upholstery will maintain its handsome lines over the years. Finally, the Heritage look is in no small part a result of what is generally acknowledged as the finest, most extensive and diversified fabric selection in the furniture industry. Your Heritage chair or sofa can be covered in one of over 140 different patterns in more than 650 carefully selected colors, weaves and yarns. All quilting on appropriate fabrics is done in Heritage's own plant to assure quality consistent with the careful tailoring of your Heritage piece.

A New Heritage Custom Order Service... "Selection 120"

"Selection 120" offers you the ultimate in versatility in upholstered furniture. It is a program that enables you to custom-design your sofa or sectional pieces to the most exacting decorating specifications. "Selection 120" offers you a choice of eight back styles, three different arm styles (with either square or round cushion) in any length from [illegible] inches.

With complementing [illegible], ottomans, and bolsters, of course. For a detailed brochure on "Selection 120" and the comprehensive catalogue of Heritage Distinguished Upholstery, send 50¢ to Heritage Furniture Co., High Point, North Carolina, Dept. HB-104.

the fish (with dry white wine) precedes the meat (presumably with red), and so on.

SEMILLON (Say-me-yawn). Excellent white wine grape, widely grown in southwestern France and planted to some extent in California. It gives its best results when interplanted with or vinified with another variety, especially the Sauvignon Blanc, as in Sauternes and Graves. Alone, its wine has definite character and considerable class, but frequently is often too low in acid, lacks freshness and fruit, as frequently in the case of Montravel and Monbazillac, in France, and occasionally in California. On the whole, the best Semillon wines are those that have at least a trace of sweetness; bone dry, they can be slightly bitter, especially if produced in a warm district.

SERCIAL (Sair-see-al). An important and excellent white grape variety, producing what are, on the whole, the best dry wines on the island of Madeira.

SEYSSEL (Say-sell). Interesting white wine, pale, fresh, light, very dry, produced round the little town of this name on the Rhone River, east (upstream) from Lyon. A large part of the very limited production is made into mousseux, and Seyssel Mousseux is one of the very best sparkling wines of France, surpassed, perhaps, only by Champagne.

SHERRY. (The subject of Sherry will be covered in a separate article in a forthcoming issue of HOUSE BEAUTIFUL.)

SICK. A sick wine is a bad wine, almost always cloudy, usually with a bouquet which is odd, unfamiliar, and unpleasant, a flavor which is definitely "off." Fortunately, very few such wines ever reach the consumer.

SILKY. Wine tasters' term, applied to wines that are notably smooth and fine-textured.

SMALL. Wine tasters' term, applied to a wine of not much consequence, not much distinction, let alone body or power—possibly very agreeable all the same. Many "ordinary" wines are small, but there are plenty of us who would prefer them to great wines as a daily diet, as we might prefer good, simple cooking to la grande cuisine.

SOAPY. Wine tasters' term used of wines that are disagreeably flat, low in acid, and unappetizing.

SOAVE (Swa-vay). Excellent dry white wine, among Italy's best, produced just west of Verona, on the southernmost foothills of the Alps. The predominant grape varieties are the Garganega and Trebbiano, plus a little Riesling. The vines are trained high, pergola-fashion, six or seven feet above the ground. In addition to the extremely picturesque little town of Soave itself, the neighboring village of Monforte is considered part of the Soave zone, and a very large part of their local production is crushed by the local cooperative cellar, or Cantina Sociale, one of Italy's most important and best equipped. Shipped in tall green bottles, like the wines of Alsace, Soave is pale-straw in color, light, clean and fresh on the palate, dry without being acid—a most agreeable wine, in short, though hardly a great one. It matures early and should be drunk before it is three years old.

SOFT. Wine tasters' term, a generally favorable adjective, although not always so. A soft wine is one neither harsh nor green, although possibly mild and dull. All wines should have some softness; if they have too much they may be flat or even common.

SOMMELIER (So-mel-yea). French term for wine waiter. In French restaurants, the sommelier is usually in charge of some bottling and cellar work as well, and, when serving, wears a traditional uniform, with a chain and keys.

The way Lees makes flowers bloom, they won't wilt.

This is truth, not poetry.

At Lees, blooming is a kind of Turkish bath we give our carpets.

Our object is to spread the yarn. Plump it out. Give it extra body.

Once we make a carpet bloom, it's for good.

We give you more little extras, too.

Like the best wools, nylons and acrylics seven countries can produce.

Like good pure dyes that can stand up to air and wear.

Like special tough backs.

Like eagle-eye inspections that catch the little things. Snags, ravels, sprouts, knots, grins, puckers, wrinkles, bulges, streaks, flaws, mismatches, and even suspicious smells.

When we print Lees, bold and clear, on the back of a carpet, there are no bugs.

Are you buying a conservative broadloom? Or a flowery one?

Bear in mind. A rose by any other name than Lees is not the same.

For a lot of good, down-to-earth reasons, "those heavenly carpets by Lees."

Write us. We'll tell you where to find them.

SONOMA. One of the most important wine-producing counties of northern California, and on the whole one of the best. It lies north of San Francisco: its southern edge is on tidewater and overlooks San Francisco Bay. The nearby town of Sonoma owes its origin to the northernmost of the 21 Spanish missions established by Franciscan monks north of what is now the Mexican border between 1769 and 1823: it was they who brought the vine and viticulture to California. Commercial vineyards were planted near Sonoma before the Civil War, and among the best known was Buena Vista, which belonged to Colonel (or Count) Haraszthy, who has not unfairly been called the father of the California wine industry.

Like many California counties, Sonoma is almost a little world in itself and has an astonishingly wide diversity of climates and soils and countryside. The interior, from San Francisco Bay and the town of Sonoma northward to Santa Rosa and Guerneville, is as cool as Burgundy in France, and admirably adapted to wine-growing; on the west, the Coast Range, covered with giant redwoods, along the bleak beaches of the cold Pacific, is not wine country at all, far too cold and too humid for the vine: farther north, in the Russian River Valley, from Healdsburg to Asti and beyond, there are thousands of acres of rolling hills and vineyards, as productive and warm as those of central Italy. These, largely planted to common red varieties, such as the Carignan, Petit Syrah, Mataro and Grenache, and of course the Zinfandel, give a more-than-respectable vin ordinaire, much better than that of the French Midi. The whites, from the northern, warmer part of the country, are far less good than the reds.

SOUPLE. Literally, French for "supple," although more properly used of wine than its English equivalent. It means a wine not too high in tannin or acid, smooth, agreeable, ready to drink.

SPARKLING BURGUNDY. Burgundy wine made sparkling or mousseux by any one of several methods: generally, red, although some rosé and some white are produced. Long popular in the United States and to a lesser degree in England, it is hardly ever drunk in France except by tourists, and does not even appear on the wine lists of most of the better French restaurants. The finer grades of still Burgundy are never used in its manufacture: it is a wine regarded with amused contempt by most real wine lovers and by all experts. American Sparkling Burgundy, whether produced in California or in New York State, is substantially as good as that made in France.

SPÄTLESE (Shpate-lay-zuh). German wine term, which literally means "late picking" or "late harvest." On a label it indicates a superior natural (unsugared) wine, made from grapes picked after the main, normal vintage is over. Such grapes of course tend to be somewhat riper than the average, and a Spätlese is therefore fuller-bodied, riper, and generally a trace sweeter than other wines of the same vineyard and year: it also usually costs from 30 to 50 percent more.

SPICY. Said of a wine with a pronounced and special aroma or taste, piquant but natural, properly its own and on the whole agreeable. Gewurztraminer is an obvious example, but there are many others.

SPUMANTE (Spoo-mahn-tay). Italian word which means foaming or sparkling: as applied to wine, a wine that is truly sparkling, as contrasted with one that is frizzante, or only slightly and briefly so. Spumanti are made in various ways, that called Gran Spumante usually by the French Champagne process of fermentation in bottle, most of the others by fermentation in bulk, the "cuve close" or "Charmat" method.

STEELY. Extremely hard, and even tart, without being harsh or green. Austere, possibly remarkable, but unprepossessing.

ADONIS No Bryce pattern has ever portrayed more gracefully classic lines than the popular new Adonis shown at the left. The sparkling upright bowls and tall, clean drawn stems flow together to create a feeling of regal beauty to compliment your finest table setting. Available in cocktail and iced-tea as well as the goblet, sherbet and wine glasses shown. Ask to see Adonis in better glassware departments.

ANTIQUE When your favorite eighteenth century ancestors dined elegantly, their crystal might well have closely resembled this beautiful Antique pattern by Bryce. Yet, so simple and forthright is the design, it is equally at home in modern or traditional settings. Shapes available are the goblet, sherbet and wine which appear at the left. Send 10¢ for literature describing this and other outstanding Bryce patterns.

INDIAN HEAD We doubt you will have seen anything so completely unusual as these sparkling bar glasses from the oldest house in America still hand-blowing and hand-cutting fine lead crystal. Each bears an amber glass seal (no two exactly alike) with the imprint of an Indian head pressed in. No attempt has been made to counterfeit old pennies, but if you rub your finger over the Indian's head before you take a drink, it will bring you good luck—we think. See these Amerindic classics at your favorite store or write for the name of your nearest dealer. 13-ounce highball, 10-ounce old-fashioned about $2.00 each.

STEINBERG (Shtein-bairg). Celebrated historic 62-acre vineyard in the heart of Germany's Rheingau district. It was created and the wall around it was constructed in the 12th Century by monks of the same Cistercian Order as those responsible for its sister domain, the Clos de Vougeot, in Burgundy, and the same remarkable man, St. Bernard de Clairvaux, oversaw the creation of both. Together with the adjoining monastery, Kloster Eberbach, the vineyard was taken over by the German state, and is now part of the Staatsweingut. It stretches over the rolling hills directly behind Hattenheim, and its wines are sold as Steinberger, or Steinberger Kabinett, or Steinberger Spätlese Kabinett, or Auslese, Trockenbeerenauslese, etc. Between these various grades and classes, all Naturweine and all estate-bottled, there are of course enormous differences, even in any given year. All of them have, nevertheless, certain family characteristics—full body, authority, great class, power, and depth of flavor, sometimes at the expense of subtlety and forthrightness, sometimes at the expense of charm. They are less good in very dry years than the Marcobrunners, and less attractive in poor years than the riper and fruitier Rüdesheimers; at their best they are simply incomparable.

STILL. Nonsparkling. If a new wine, one that has finished its fermentation; if an older wine, one that contains no perceptible amount of CO_2, or carbon dioxide.

STURDY. Wine tasters' term, perhaps a little less favorable than robust.

SUGARS. As far as wine is concerned, these are most simply defined as the elements in must or grape juice that can be converted into alcohol through the action of yeast—fermentable sugars, in other words. But also normally present in grape juice and most wine are minute amounts of nonfermentable sugars, such as pentose; reducing sugar is the total of both, determined chemically. Residual sugar is the sugar remaining in a wine, for whatever reason, after fermentation.

SULPHITING. The adding of sulphur in the form of sulphurous acid, sulphur dioxide or sulphites, to grape juice or to wine, with the object of delaying or preventing fermentation. This is common practice in modern wineries; the must, once sterilized, is later re-innoculated with a special chosen yeast culture. But when the same process is used to "hold" the sweetness of a light, partially fermented wine, the result, unless great care is exercised, can be most unfortunate—a wine that literally reeks of sulphur, like many cheap Liebfraumilchs and white Bordeaux.

SULPHUR. Element properly and widely used in many phases of grape-growing and wine-making. Dusted or sprayed on the vines, it is an efficient safeguard against many of the diseases, fungi, and pests to which grapes are subject. In the cellar, it is a standard sterilizing agent for casks, barrels, etc. But it is often used, and often too freely used, to keep a poorly balanced white wine from oxidizing, or to "hold" a certain amount of sweetness in a wine that would otherwise continue its fermentation and be completely dry. There is nothing objectionable about this practice, providing the sulphur is not too apparent in the finished wine. To a wine taster, the presence of even a limited amount of sulphur usually makes itself known by a slight prickling in the nose, and an odd, faintly "pasty" impression on the tip of the tongue.

SULPHURING. Sulphuring, a quite different process from sulphiting, involves the sterilizing of casks or barrels in the cellar and the treatment of vines in the field. Vineyards are regularly dusted with flowers of sulphur to prevent oidium and mildew during the growing season. Sulphur wicks are frequently burned in empty casks to eliminate bacteria.

SWEET. Sweetness in a table wine, or in a fortified wine, for that matter, may be wholly natural or partly natural or not natural at all. In a fine French Sauternes or a Beerenauslese from the Rhineland, it comes from the grapes themselves, which have been allowed to hang on the vines until they are overripe and wholly natural. Due to the difference in climate, no such natural sweet wines are produced, except experimentally, in the United States. In many other wines, sweetness also comes entirely from the grape, but remains in the wine because sulphur has been used or brandy added—the former being the case in cheap white Bordeaux and Liebfraumilch, the latter in Port, whether produced in Portugal or in California. Sherry and Marsala are sweet because of heavy, sweet wine or the equivalent of grape syrup added to them. Sweetness, in any case, is not necessarily a virtue, nor is it necessarily a fault; this depends entirely on the character of the wine.

SYLVANER (Sil-van-ner.) Rather productive, superior white wine grape, probably of German or Austrian origin, widely planted in many countries. In Germany, it is easily first in total acreage, although it gives a lighter, softer, shorter-lived wine than the more distinguished Riesling. In Alsace it is classed as a "noble" variety, an honor which it scarcely merits, since the wine it yields is really just an excellent vin de carafe, fresh, fruity, and agreeable. It does well in Austria, and in the Italian Tyrol, especially round Bressanone; and there are some plantings in Switzerland, in California, and in Chile. In the course of its travels it has acquired some odd pseudonyms: it is called the Oesterreicher (the "Austrian") in the Rheingau, the Franken Traube (or "Franconian grape") in the Rheinpfalz, and even the "Franken Riesling" in Franconia itself, where, for once, it approaches the true Riesling in quality. In Switzerland, it is sometimes known as the "Johannisberg," and it even calls itself, quite legally, the "Riesling" in California. It has been often successfully crossed with the true Riesling: the so-called Mainriesling and the popular Müller-Thurgau are two of the best-known offspring.

TACHE, La (La Tahsh). One of the very great red Burgundies, produced by a small vineyard in the commune of Vosne-Romanee, entirely owned by the owners of Romanee-Conti and a part of the domain that carries this name. In the days when wine regulations were less strict its wines were sometimes labeled "La Tache Romanee," and the late Christopher Morley gave this name to one of his books, The Romany Stain, but it is unlikely that Romanee had any connection with gypsies, as he fancied, and it is at least doubtful that Tache, in this instance, means "stain." Before World War II, the vineyard consisted of about three and one-half acres, between Les Gaudichots and Les Malconsorts. A new decree, during the German occupations in 1943, accorded to a major part of Les Gaudichots, the appellation La Tache, and there are now about 15 acres entitled to the name. This quadrupling of the vineyard's extent has of course increased its production, and 201 hectoliters (roughly 2,200 cases) were made in 1962. The wine has not much suffered (for Les Gaudichots was a very great vineyard) and is velvety, full-bodied, with quite extraordinary bouquet and depth of flavor. ■

Naturally you expect to hear great swelling sound in a movie organ—but not in a spinet!

Our Theatre Compact is the only home organ that combines these three qualities . . . (1) Theatre emotion (2) Big Allen sound (3) Small size.

Yes, Theatre Compact has sound effects. Lifelike effects. Marimba, Xylophone, Chinese Block, Traps, Percussion with patented Chiff, etc.

But you don't buy Theatre Compact for sound effects. They come with it.*

Theatre Compact you buy for its tone. Its natural organ sound that comes from finer tonal design and expert craftsmanship. The quality that makes every note more musical, every solo more melodious, every ensemble passage stirring.

The tone that has won a unique reputation among world-famous organists, symphony orchestras, church professionals and others who have a stake in tone.

The tone that makes an Allen appealing after the novelty of owning an organ has worn off

Ask any church organist about Allen's reputation for producing the finest tone. And send for our attractive free literature that shows the ways in which Allen is not only different but, in fact, superior.

In years gone by, this folding table's original was acquired by the Forslund family who now reproduce it commercially. The 36″ by 18″ top (26″ high) is ample for buffet spreads: fine for typing, games, or whatever. Finely crafted of genuine cherry; locking metal device folds the strong leg units. $29.95 delivered; honey-buckwheat or deep-cherry finish. Arm chair $54.60; lamp, $23.50. Forslund's, 122 E. Fulton, Grand Rapids, Mich.

Hagerty's latest work-saver for silver care is an impregnated dusting cloth used as a maintenance supplement to Hagerty Tarnish Preventative Polish. Dusting with it regularly keeps the polish's remarkable tarnish-prevention service at peak effectiveness indefinitely. $2; guaranteed safe for any silver; sewn to an untreated polishing cloth and plastic shield. From B. Altman & Co., N.Y. 16; they also have the polish ($2.95).

Teakwood "lazy Susan" seats the spice cans (4-ounce) in individual niches. The convenient set-up carries by its birch post; used in inverted position, installs on underside of a cabinet. Sam Mann Spice Rack comes with corked, porcelainized aluminum cans (white, yellow, burnt orange or turquoise); pedestal is like material in white. Finely made; 11″ by 8″ by 4″; includes labels. $14. Designed for Living, 131 E. 57th St., N.Y. 22.

Any mail or magazine fits into Nor-Gee's king-size mailbox; also daily or Sunday papers. All enter unharmed, are kept safe from wind or wetness, made pilfer-proof by inner Loc-Kover. Strong aluminum structure: 16″ by 11½″, bronze, white, black, or embossed-natural. $9.95 (west of Rockies $10.45). Engraved name plate adds $2.75, house number (4 digits) 65¢. Loc-Kover, $4.75. From Nor-Gee, 4058 Walden, Lancaster, New York.

Reservoir in handle of Jet-It Window Washer holds cleaning liquid in goodly supply; pushbutton action pumps out controlled squirts; follow-up with the circular brush, then the rubber squeegee leaves the surface dry, sparkling clean. Ideal for glass shower stalls, tiled or mirrored walls; or as an auto accessory for cleaning windshield, fogged windows. Sturdy plastic construction. $2.50; Hollis Co., 1133 Broadway, N.Y. 10, N.Y.

Here's a truly safe insecticide, singularly effective, heretofore available only to commercial or institutional users. It can be used safely near food, tots, pets and even to de-flea dogs; kills all flying or crawling insects, has instant action. Its chemical formula is pleasantly scented, non-toxic, non-inflammable. X-Y-Z Insect Spray Bomb is made and supplied by Meirrett Inc., P.O. Box 361, Danbury, Conn.; 2 for $3.95.

Coffee is dispersed, measured, evenly distributed by this new device for no-key coffee cans. Four hatches alternately opened by handle action disperse a level tablespoonful at a time throughout percolator basket. You attach the unit to the full can: it provides an airtight closure for the coffee's duration, is then snapped off for re-use. Made of nontoxic plastic. $1.98. Coffee Master Matik, P.O. Box 2289, San Francisco 94126.

Unfolded, Howard Tuckaway Dryer furnishes 30-foot area for hanging laundry; or use it alongside the ironing board for ironed things. It folds to 2″ by 4″ by 35″; sets up in a few seconds, locks into open position. Tubular aluminum frame is fitted with durable plastic lines threaded through end bars. Weight is only 3 pounds. It fits a bathtub for drip-dry wash; has non-marring plastic tipped feet. $6.95; Macy's, N.Y. 1, N.Y.

With Hold-the-Phone Caddy you avoid the need to just let the receiver drop where it may when a phone conversation is interrupted or someone has to be called to the phone. Below the cradle, a firm clip holds any note pad you wish to insert for messages or reminders; adjacent socket holds any pencil or pen. Nonmarring adhesive (supplied) installs the unit. $1.50; Miles Kimball, 33 Algoma Blvd., Oshkosh, Wisconsin

Gepo wall scale from Denmark is a home adaptation of bakery equipment. The enclosure flips down, becomes the balance pan, lifts off for emptying. Springless pendulum mechanism gives accurate weighing from ½-ounce to 11 pounds; dial has a magnifier. Precision made of thick, strong plastic. Ideal for verifying weight of groceries. All-white or with red, blue, or yellow enclosure unit. $10: Hess Dept. Store, Allentown, Pa.

Yes, even lipstick spots

At last! A dishwasher detergent that really does both!
(1) cleans difficult food stains (2) ends water spots

You need a dishwasher detergent that does more than stop water spots. Now it's here!

No matter what the stain—dried-in grease, sticky chocolate, gooey syrup, filmed-in milk, stubborn tea stains, dried-up egg—even lipstick spots—now you can have glasses, silver, dishes, pots that are cleaner, brighter than any other dishwasher detergent can make them—and without water spotting.

Electrasol's even-flow formula cleans without clinging. This is due to an extraordinary wetting agent that makes water "wetter" so it cleans even the most difficult stains—then rolls right off your dishes. Will not spot, film or streak...no matter how hard the water...or what make your dishwasher. No wonder Electrasol is recommended by every leading dishwasher manufacturer.

Will & Baumer candles

. . . shapes and colors are always correct

Like the traditionally expressive roses, Will & Baumer Candles in the "classic" shapes are always correct. Taperlite, Tavern, Vassar, and Princess handdips, graceful Twistolite, or intriguing Tapertwist twist style, Marble or Mayfair formals, always say the right thing for any occasion and in any season. Their fashion-right colors and satin-smooth finish make them prized traditions which are always in style, always correct, always beautiful.

And for unique conversation makers when the occasion or season calls for special purpose candles, look for the name Will & Baumer and be sure of finest quality.

FROM THE WILL & BAUMER CANDLE CENTER

Ask for them by brand name. At fine stores everywhere.

When they're from the Will & Baumer Candle Center you know they're correct.

10 Ways to Improve Your Hot Water Supply

Here are all the facts on how to get more hot water from your present system (and how to get the best buy in a new water heater if there's no other way out)

• Hot water is one luxurious commodity that we should never run out of. But we often do. The increasing use of automatic laundries and dishwashers, and the growing recognition of the restorative and therapeutic values of hot showers and baths in these tumultuous times tax the average domestic hot water system to—or beyond—its yesteryear limits.

Most people don't get a new water heater until the old one begins to leak. Meanwhile, they subject themselves to maddening inconvenience and arrange the schedules of their daily lives to meet the limited capacity of their water heater. The typical heater in service today has a total life expectancy of seven to ten years. If your heater has been around that long, it probably does not have much time left. The wise policy is to get rid of it and buy a larger one to meet your present and future needs.

But the heater is only a part of your domestic hot-water system. The pipes and valves which deliver and control the flow of this precious necessity are also of vital importance. So whether you need a new heater or not, your whole system should be thoroughly checked for faulty operation and inadequate design. Here are ten ways to coax more hot water from your present system.

1. Clean your heater. It may be loaded with sediment. Sediment at the bottom of a gas heater's tank is an insulator. It reduces the amount of heat that gets through from gas flame to water. You can drain this sludge by opening th faucet at the bottom of the tan Let it run into a bucket until th water runs clean. This should b done periodically as preventiv maintenance. But mere flushin won't remove mineral scale an lime. If you have a glass-lined tan you can use a nontoxic tank clean er, such as "Mag-Erad." You plumber will know about it. Clean ing will give you more hot wate and reduce fuel costs.

If you have a tankless heate (usually the case when a house heating boiler also supplies d mestic hot water), its coil may b caked with lime. If it's in ba shape, replace it. If the lime d posits are only minor, you may b able to remove them by acid clean ing. In some hard-water areas, coil should be acid-cleaned and flushe every six months. If you have water softener and filter, you'l never have trouble with a clogge heater or plumbing system.

2. Repair leaky faucets. A fauce that drips 90 drops of hot water minutes wastes 300 gallons month. That's enough for a doze loads of laundry or 40 showers. Re place the washer, or, if a faucet i old and worn, replace it entirely.

3. Check the piping. If hot wate only trickles out when the fauce is completely on, it indicates pipe clogged by scale. It isn't alway necessary to replace these pipes Sometimes you can get relief by re placing only the fittings that join pipe sections together. Elbow fit tings, where pipes turn corners, ar

Would you like to see your child gain as much as a full year's grade in reading in as little as six weeks' time? These are results parents have seen again and again with this simple home-tutoring course in reading.

Mrs. H. M. Kilpatrick of Reno, Nevada writes: "After six weeks of work with The Sound Way to Easy Reading, my son improved not only in reading and spelling but in all of his lessons because he could read with understanding. He is in fourth grade but could only read at the second grade level. In just six weeks he advanced the two years."

Mrs. Kilpatrick is only one of over 50,000 parents who have turned to The Sound Way to Easy Reading for help in the frustrating problem of a child who can't read. And over 3,000 schools use it.

Teaches with records

Don't think it's all your child's fault if he hasn't learned to read. Many of our brightest children are not able to grasp the "look-and-say" method taught in most schools today. Yet, many educators insist that at least 40% of our children must have formal training in phonics—that they will never master reading without it!

That is why so many poor readers show remarkable progress with The Sound Way to Easy Reading. It teaches reading by the phonics method (the method by which most parents learned to read years ago). Its phonograph records and charts show your child exactly what to do, so he can teach himself without any help from you.

The records drill him in the sounds of the 26 letters in the alphabet and their blends. Once he learns the 123 basic phonics sounds in this course he can read up to 85% of the words in the English language. It works for children of all ages—in the earliest grades, and even in high school.

Tested and proved

In a pilot study by university psychologists, children gained up to a full year's grade in oral reading skill after only 30 lessons with The Sound Way to Easy Reading.

A semester-long study involving 214 pupils in 4 Chicago schools proved that the classes given The Sound Way to Easy Reading showed marked improvement in reading and spelling over the control groups.

Help your child now

Don't wait for your poor reader to reach high school before coming to his aid. By starting your child on The Sound Way to Easy Reading now, you can change his entire attitude toward school—turn his sense of failure into the joy of success. Send for full information. No salesman will call. Mail this coupon now!

These are the records and self-quizzing cards that can help your child gain as much as a full year's grade in reading in just a few weeks.

PARENTS DELIGHTED

Better marks—"Bobby has used the records for only three weeks, yet his reading and spelling grades have gone from Ds to C-plus and B. Now his teacher has borrowed the course to help other children." Mrs. W. H. Gregory, Calif.

Advanced two grades—"In ten weeks my son advanced from Second Grade level in reading to the Fourth Grade level. His spelling improved to the high Fourth Grade level. We feel fortunate in learning of The Sound Way To Easy Reading." Mrs. B. J. Smith, Concord, Calif.

Four sons—"In twelve weeks, two of our boys brought up their reading grades from D to B. And our other two came up from D to C. I'll never get more for my money than I already have with your course." Mr. John Gehde, Jr., Wisconsin

TEACHERS ENTHUSIASTIC

Recommends to parents—"Your course has been excellent in standardizing the teaching of phonics in our entire school system. I recommend it to parents as a home tutoring course for poor readers." R. B. Miller, Supervisor, Monterey, Va.

A pleasure to hear my class read—"I am just delighted. In the last twelve weeks 22 of my 29 fourth grade pupils brought up their scores in silent reading. Their oral reading is so improved it's a pleasure to hear them now." Mary L. Henderson, Crowley, La.

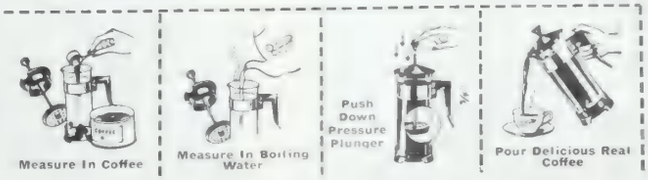
NEW INSTA-BREWER BREWS REAL COFFEE IN 30 SECONDS

Now—you can have real coffee—any strength you want it—in seconds. You can even make one pot of coffee—and get mild, medium, strong and extra-strong coffee—out of the very same potful!

This unique coffee brewing method brings to American coffee lovers a European gourmet idea that guarantees better coffee—hot, rich in taste, aroma and satisfaction—at less money per cup!

It works on the principle of a Pressure-Plunger. This forces all the water through all the coffee at once. Gives you all the flavor, all the aroma, all the rich coffee taste—because it doesn't boil or filter them out! You make, serve and enjoy full-flavor coffee—seconds after you begin to make it!

You can make from one cup to six. Make Espresso, too. Never any need to add extra coffee "for the pot." This means coffee savings—about one-fifth on every pot you make.



Insta-Brewer is made of finest possible materials—Corning Heat-proof glass pot —Stainless Steel working parts. And it's guaranteed for 5 full years.

Try it—and see for yourself how much it adds to coffee enjoyment—how much it saves in time, and coffee!

Only $9.95 per unit plus $1 PP & Hdlg. Order for home and office. 2 units: $18.95 plus $1 PP & Hdlg.

TRAN NGOC KHANH, VIETNAMESE, AGE 8½. Walks with difficulty. Polio. Three other children in family. Youngest, 2 years, also polio victim. Father TB. Cannot work. Mother earns $20.59 per month. Family undernourished. Live in hut. Two beds. Must now sell hut to pay medical bills. Khanh good student. Wants to be doctor. Parents look with despair on children they cannot help. Need acute. Help to Khanh means help to whole family.

You or your group can become a Foster Parent of a needy child. You will be sent the case history and photo of your "adopted" child and letters from the child himself. Correspondence is translated by PLAN. The child knows who you are. At once he is touched by love and a sense of belonging. Your pledge provides new clothing, blankets, education and medical care, as well as a cash grant of $8.00 every month. Each child receives full measure of material aid from your contribution. Distribution of goods is supervised by PLAN staff and is insured against loss in every country where PLAN operates. Help in the responsible way. "Adopt" a child through Foster Parents' Plan. Let some child love you.

PLAN is a non-political, non-profit, non-sectarian, government-approved, independent relief organization, registered under No. VFA019 with the Advisory Committee on Voluntary Foreign Aid of the Agency for International Development of the United States Government and filed with the National Information Bureau in New York City. We eagerly offer our financial statement on request because we are so proud of the handling of our funds. PLAN helps children in Italy, Greece, South Korea, Viet Nam, Hong Kong, the Philippines, Colombia and Ecuador.

Pat Baird Ship's Wheel

Dept. HB-10, 714 Hillgrove Ave., Western Springs, Illinois

Little Kim was abandoned by her mother in an alley of Seoul, Korea. She was found curled up behind a box, shivering, hungry and frightened.

Her G.I. father probably doesn't even know she exists. And since Kim is a mixed-blood child, no relative will ever claim her.

Her future? Well, that's up to you. Look at her! Her every movement and gesture seems to be a plea for someone to love her. Will you?

For only $10 a month you or your group can "adopt" a boy or girl equally as needy as Kim, in your choice of the countries listed.

You will receive the child's picture, life history, and the opportunity to exchange letters, Christmas cards — and love.

Since 1938 American sponsors have found this to be the beginning of a warm personal friendship with a deserving child, making it possible for Christian Children's Fund to assist children in orphanages, schools, and special projects around the world.

Won't you help? Today?

Sponsors needed to help children in the following countries this month: Korea, Japan, Taiwan, Hong Kong, India, American Indians.

NEW RESEARCH SHOWS INTELLIGENCE DEVELOPS AS MUCH IN FIRST FOUR YEARS OF LIFE AS IN THE NEXT 13!

The first four years, says the study, establish learning habits that will enable your child to either graduate as a "professional" or remain among the unskilled.

Creative Playthings should fill his life those first four years.

These fun toys stimulate curiosity, imagination and experiment — basic elements to the development of intelligence. Creative Playthings help develop vocabulary — build into his play fundamentals of mathematics, physics, humanities. Accepted and endorsed by 43,000 schools. Psychologists say Creative Playthings can help increase your child's I.Q. 20 points before his first day of school. That's a real Christmas blessing to give your child.

CHEAPER BY THE DOZEN. Sometimes a dollar gift has a special brand of magic that is difficult to explain. But whatever it is, these crayon dolls have it. The wooden soldier and the little Dutch girl are hand crafted and hand decorated in lollypop colors. Pop off their hats and inside are 12 crayon pencils. About 4½" h., $1 each. 6, $5. 12, $9.50. Q. T. Novelty, HB10, 366 Fifth, N.Y. 10001.

THE GLORY OF ROME is reflected in the golden image of an ancient coin. It's handsome and hefty, has the opulent richness of that lush era, is large enough to use as an ashtray for your husband's desk. Antiqued golden metal, 5½" w., $1. Also available as a pen stand and tray with a black ball point pen, $1.95. From Vernon Specialties, HB10, 30 Evans Street, New Rochelle, N.Y.

FATTEN UP THE PIG or the chicken. And are they hungry! They'll guzzle up your loose change, hold lots of baby sitting earnings, paper route fees. Ceramic banks decorated in bright, light colors will lure a young spendthrift into the ways of a penny pincher. Metal lock, key. 4" high, $2.75 each plus 25¢ postage. F.A.O. Schwarz, HB, 745 Fifth Ave., New York, New York.

"PRAYING HANDS." Albrecht Durer's well-loved work, inspired a handsome pair of book ends to hold the family Bible or other treasured works. The hands in carefully detailed silhouette are metal with a antiqued golden finish. With felted base to slip under books, they're 1 x 3¾", $1.98 the pair. The Ferry House, Inc., Dept. HB10, Dobbs Ferry, N.Y.

BEYOND THE PAIL is the story of how it came into being. These quaint wooden sap buckets are the originals that hung from the famous maple trees in Vermont. Artist Tom Fitz-Simons of Manchester has painted them in glorious colors: red with eagle, white with fruit. 9½x11½", for wastebaskets, magazines, plants. $8.50. Vermont North Country Store, Middletown, N.J.
